While the YouTube himself is alright (as in, "At least he isn't an obnoxious prank channel" alright), his videos have introduced young teens (11-15) to political ideologies ranging from Anarcho-Fascism to Posadism. Baaaassically, he's the dude unintentionally responsible for the great majority of nations with "Anarcho-Juche-FascCap" and similar 'Zany' ideologies as their main ideology.

Eh, both really. You have teenagers who legit believe that the US/EU is an authoritarian oligarchy so we need to convert to Jucheism (IDC who you are, I'm willing to say the US/EU is slightly more livable than North Korea) while it also has produced a subset of teenagers who think adding more -isms to their already long and complex ideology makes them funnier.

There's more of the latter than the former tbh, but it's annoying to see what are basically children/young teens running around claiming that "Green Theo-Feminist Hetrosexual Monarcho-AnComism with Zanizibarian Characteristic is the best ideology in the world!" regardless of whether or not they're being ironic or they legit believe in their ideology.

In all seriousness, I'm taking it this Jreg dude is the reason why I sometimes see people posting their political compass position over time and they're literally all over the damn compass? Probably cuz they 'tried out' (for lack of a better term) whatever ideologies caught their eye after hearing about it from him.

Meanwhile my political position over time is like:

I went from being a run-of-the-mill centrist-slightly centre-left social liberal to a left-wing libertarian socialist and social progressive.

Wexas wrote:

As someone who is a huge critic of the United States (especially since I live here and obviously have more insight into it vs if I complained about the EU), I always gotta say that anyone who seriously acts like the US or the EU (or any other modern developed Western country like Australia, New Zealand, Canada, etc.) is somehow the worst place in the world is hell ignorant at best.

the fact that the only modern-day party anyone cares about that calls itself nazbol is limonov's party, and that he literally had to expel another founding member for being too much of a nazi for closeted nazis to feel comfortable around, should tell you that they don't.

if you want to argue the point further go to nsg. but this is a thread about literary dichés. so let's just not, if you don't mind.

I seriously and heavily doubt that Jreg is going to be anything but a mild annoyance to this site for a few years.

This guy gets a few hundred thousand views tops and its not like the people who watch him are going to be taken seriously by anyone except a small fringe group of people who lurk around sites like 4chan and the dark recesses of twitter. And otherwise, Politicians become memes just by leaning slightly to the left or right (Bernie/all of the Libertarian Candidates). People who live in a place all their lives do not have experience in criticising what they do not experience or have contact with. US citizens claiming it is good or bad do not have a solid reference to base their experience on. Only people who travelled and have residency in two countries could have a reference to rate their experience in relation to each other.

The cave man in Socrates thought experiment comes to mind. He does not have any alternative experience to rate his own conditions of being "good" or "bad". The rating comes from a place of ignorance.

Eugenics, not in the traditional sense. Genetic engineering but no sterilisation and certainly not extermination.
Cultural homogeneity I have no problem with but personally don't feel very strongly about it.
