Monkey 1501 died because he believed that he was meant to be 1051, not 1501, and he died of a heart attack.

I kinda messed up the thread when I typed Monkey 1505 instead of Monkey 1055, but luckily it was fixed.

The longest story ever... Stories made of one sentence are often not good.
You write nations.
You can do better. Here is a longer story with a moral.

Monkey #1033 was a special monkey. He was an economist.
As an economist, he did not want to have many relations with other monkeys and that was special in a monkey society.
In his models, however he knew, how monkey's mind worked, he believed in the "simia oeconomica" (homo oeconomicus), the rational acting monkey.
Maybe, because that was the way he thought he was acting and he could not imagine any other way.

He believed, that you should increase the GDP by increasing the font size, though.

Don't laugh, we believe that unemployment vanishes, if we exclude people from the statistics.

But monkeys listened to him - his models involved math. MATH! The most accurate science!
(No need to question the underlying premises of the model).

He earned a small fortune and bought a large banana farm somewhere in a very isolated area (Man the land prices were cheap!). And went there.

The first year was nice, he hired some workers for more money than he wanted to spend - and made some money in the first year with the banana harvest. In the second year however, the world was struck with floods and burning forests. The wood price went up to astronomical heights... and higher and higher.... Then a peak seemed to come.
OMG, that short before the harvest!

Monkey #1033 decided to skip the harvest and to chop down the trees and to sell the wood.

He earned a really large fortune - and he had to fire the workers (no trees remaining).

He tried to fire them on the spot - but no. The workers were organized.
And they had employment protection. Which socialist hell was this?
And they also had to be paid with bananas, which he had to import for astronomical prices, because the harvest was lost.

Well, employment protection ended, he had terminated his rental apartment, and wanted to leave. He wanted to pay some monkeys to drive him away from the isolated village, but they did not serve him.
For no offered money. Turned out they didn't even sell bananas to him.

"After the last tree has been cut down,
after the last river has been poisoned,
after the last fish has been caught,
then will you find that money cannot be eaten."

He went to the local major of the village. "I demand to be served! Let me go away!

I give you money, prosperity, that is much worth!."

The major laughed and said: "You have physically chopped down the prosperity of this village. Maybe you should become a beaver and eat this!." He threw a piece of wood.

"So you want to let me die?"

"Yes", said the major.

Things I could have skipped - I do not know
