(Since the AN did not determine an alleged crime, I will answer the same as he answered.)

It's not illegal in Merulla.

Of course there are some determinations that need to be fulfilled to guarantee the safety and health well-being of consumers, but they are minimum requirements for the production and sale of any and all products.

Failure to meet these determinations is punishable by fines. Very expensive fines.

Selling an edible product with one supposed flavor but actually having another. For example; Selling a stuffed cookie that on the packaging says it is chocolate flavored, but is actually banana flavored.

Merulla is the land of the brave, the fair and of the heroes.

A great kingdom consisting of fifteen federative like states, with a decentralized power, where the real king is the Merullean people.

Come and discover Merulla, where the waves are born.

Depends on who ends up being your judge.

If the judge is more liberal, everyone involved will face a week in a re-education camp for disturbing the peace and violating the mandatory curfew. The party's host will also receive 9 lashes from a Zeruel strip while the other partygoers receive 3 lashes.

If the judge is more conservative, they may take the violation of the curfew as an act against both the government and Kelios (God), which would mean public torture and then execution for everyone involved.

While the mandatory national service does offer exceptions for conscientious objectors, they are expected to declare such. Committing fraud with the intent of evading national service is punishable by up to eight months imprisonment.

If it was some cutlery-themed suicide pact, or said spooning victim was terminally ill and consenting to all this, then the murderer would receive no penalty, but it would be bumped to the top of their criminal record, so anyone who looked would immediately know they killed someone with a spoon.

If they deliberately attacked an unconsenting victim with a spoon, WITHOUT the intention to kill them, they would receive 1 year for assault.

If they meant to kill them, then it's 8 years.

1 exception- if they had been previously convicted for either rape, murder, or serious assault (the victim was hospitalised for more than a week)

they would get six months and an 1,000 afaln fine in the first scenario, 4 years in the second scenario, and 12 years in the third.

Note- how in hell do you kill someone with a spoon??

A full year of investigations to try and figure out the context. If it's either a joke, clearly an April Fools prank, or done on a roleplaying thing, they are given a small amount of compensation for going through the trouble of the investigation. However, should it have been done as an actual conspiracy and somehow the offender be a child, they are required to take counseling, although it should be said this is very rare. If they are an adult, they are given twenty years of prison.

Stealing five pieces of trash would still be charged as petty theft, but the offense would go on the terrified student's criminal record. If they throw it on the ground, however, it would be a minimum of one year in prison

Carjacking

Use of cars is the exclusive privilege of the government, police, and military. Therefore, taking one by force constitutes "assault or threat against a representative of the civil or religious authorities," liable to a punishment of death or slavery for life. Furthermore, the assailant and his family will be subject to a thorough and gruelling interrogation to identify any Islamophobic or unpatriotic tendencies.
