As it turns out, their nation for a time was not a monarchy but rather a Fascist Dictatorship after a civil war. They tried to take over their mainland continent of Usean but were destroyed by the Allied Forces. Their Fascist Dictatorship was dismantled and the Monarchy was restored.

The Free Arabian Nation successfully defeated the armies of Oceania in a bid to take over Egypt in forty-one days. In the end, they outnumbered their enemy two to one, and had one third of their enemy's casualties.

They've banned "being an outlaw".
That's... kinda how this whole thing works, isn't it?
But wouldn't not banning outlaws be the most effective way to prevent people from being outlaws?

They are a European state that exists on a fictional landmass that extends off of the Northern European mainland and juts off from Denmark.

Their sphere of influence goes as follows:

- The Kingdom of Netherlands (Lesser Power)
- The Portuguese Empire (Lesser Power)
- The Federation of South Africa (Lesser Power)
- The Bulgarian Empire
- The Kingdom of Denmark

This sphere of influence is a series of intricate alliances built to counter its potential wartime enemies in Britain, South Germany, and their respective allies.

The nation technically has three official titles that are all equally legally viable. These are 'Federated Soviets of North America', the 'North American Federation of Soviets' and the 'Federated Council-Republics of North America'. Must be hell for any kind of sane administrative bureaucracy, why can't they just settle on one and make that the definitive title?
