When you try to visualize AN purely with flag but you know how they really are by themselves so you don't actually do what the flag really means, which basically removes the entire "based on AN's flag" thing. Also watched a single episode of one piece. I don't think it was too good, but I can finally do that obscure trend of creating and drawing a flag waifu and putting it on my nation.

The discord being a shrine to the insultation and back talking towards me for 2 things I did wrong in this thread. Comedical. I'm now suddenly not welcome on f7. Just like the institute of cellulose again.

to dumb cliques. But it's natural that individuals that the people within it don't like will get talked about, especially if they make a name for themselves by their behavior. Doubly so when they make a point of telling everyone it has gotten to them anyway, that just invites more ridicule.

You flamed me 2 times. I posted my opinion about anime two times and had a "low effort shitposter" in my signature. Yeah, clearly someone is making a name for themselves by their behaviour. I came here wanting to roleplay and receive information on others' opinions on my nation, I did not come here to be cancelled and my reputation destroyed by a clearly shitty first time f7 post and another shitty rough day post. Many, probably most f7 users probably behaved worse than I ever had at one point.

One cliché that I have never seen referenced is the sheer amount of closed roleplay threads that are limited to a region or a select group of players, but activity dies off before the third page is reached, so said roleplays are effectively dead in spite of being extremely open to all tech and lacking any real hard limits.

Also the sheer amount of sport roleplays, like, Jesus Christ if I had a penny for every type of sport active in the sports forum (and the talent contests too, by extent), I'd be a millionaire (if we also count the fictional sports)

Honestly I'm slightly afraid of sports RPs, it's a section I've looked at maybe twice in all my time here and I don't think I'll ever understand, much less enter it.

Yes I know my OOC info factbook has my own Discord username in it. I'm active in literally one invite-only server that's entirely populated by my friends from another forum I've been active on since like 2012 and occasionally talk to a few people in DM and that's it.

Sports RPs are popular because no godmodding can be done, and only Margaret, the Goddess of Randomization, Luck, Scoring, Probability, can determine what to do with you. Of course, there are small degrees of godmod such as allowing the opponent to injure your players, choose goal kicks, etc, but it is a barrel of fun and I am in it! I mostly reside in Motorsports, because as much as I like other sports too, the pace at they go is astoundingly fast! This post is totally not shilled, I went in and continued my RPs there out of sheer love.

Regarding Discord, you just got to be in the right server, I suppose. I often tend to avoid big and public ones because that went as well as ketchup and ice-cream, no offense. There are exceptions, but often times, it's the smaller servers that you feel right at home in, and even making a lot of close friends. We even get to talk to one of the Saints Row developers until he unfortunately lost his fight against cancer, but I digress because that is a bit too personal.

Cliques are a mixed bag. You do get one of those cirdejerks 7 out of 10 times, but other times, there is nothing wrong with hanging out with a group of friends you are close to. That's what close friends do, as much as you can get close to someone on the internet. ♥

One cliché I noticed is characters who are heavily ideological, with their ideology determining on how they would react to things, instead of the character having an own opinion about certain topics.
