Oh, cool! I didn't know you could search for that. I found the Gamma Ray one by chance. And after searching on MA.....it's still the only one known. Well, at least it makes it unique. Since my birthday (May 29) was just a few days ago, it's fitting that I'm listening to it this week.

I checked my sister's birth day and she has 12 metal albums. Jealous

Jesus, finding short soundtracks is difficult. I just went through 2 30 minute long ones, but the rest I'm looking through real quick, 90% of them average 50+ minutes. There's only a few I found that were shorter than 50, and no more below 30 (yet)

Though I did just find a 19 minute one...

That's because they're not really meant to listen to in one sitting, but rather to cover an entire film or game. I hardly ever listen to soundtracks, but I did listen to the Doctor Who Season 7 soundtrack last week. Some amazing songs on that one.

I've found that, unlike a lot of people I see, I can disconnect my mind from the video game that the soundtrack is based on and appreciate the soundtrack as like an album of its own. Though some soundtracks work really well as a soundtrack AND normal songs (Or instrumentals since someone got on my case earlier for calling a soundtrack instrumental a "song", but whatever).

I don't really very often go out of my way to listen to soundtracks, but I have listened to quite a lot anyway. Though it's rare for me to actually consider a soundtrack to be of really high quality, even with my separating it from the movies/games, because so many of them are just...boring. But I've found that video game soundtracks seem to actually try harder than most movie soundtracks. Hell, I even somewhat like Call of Duty game soundtracks (Somewhat. Overall pretty boring), and that's one of the most milked for all its worth, stale series out there.

Movie soundtracks on the other hand? God so many of them are tedious and boring. Generic orchestral stuff I've heard done many, many times before....

That being said, 2 of my favorite soundtracks (Rated a 9) are movies.

I also love good speakers (Or better than I had before, anyway) for video games, but my computer sucks so I can't make much use of that anymore, either...

AND JESUS ALL MIGHTY, I had to turn up my speakers loud for the ambient music, then switched to louder music....Jesus that was loud.

God dangit, they took the Mirror's Edge soundtrack off of Spotify....This is the problem with having so many artists/bands on your list...You get a lot that disappear
