The Asaf Jahi dynasty established the Nizamate of Hyderabad in the Deccan region of India, which ruled from 1707 to 1948 when it was absorbed by the Indian Republic. Civil wars took place from 2024 led by a revolutionary named Arshan, leading to the restored recognition of an independent Deccan.

AN: After the death of Josip Broz Tito, Yugoslavia was led by his son Alexander "Mišo" Broz. He started the Bureau of Culture to promote cultural and ethnic unity and standardized Serbo-Croatian as the national language.

After an invasion from the Japanese Empire in 1890, the confederacy of 16 kingdoms united into one. During WWII, the US and the UK used Isvmiri as a staging point to attack Imperial Japan. After the war, an alliance between Australia, New Zealand, the US, and Isvmiri was formed (ANZUSI).

Dwipantara is actually the fourteenth province, located in Southeast Asia, of the Khilafah Islamiyah nation-state. As the new regime only had control of the province to 'spread islam', the province performed economically badly and often found itself relying on donations from the Khilafah Islamiyah central government located more than 7 thousand km away. In the 90s, oil prices collapsed, creating widespread unrest and giving birth to the Alliance to Restore the Republic, which aims to free Dwipantara from the control of the central Khilafah Islamiyah government.

Their primary religion of Kabiism has several different branches, the Ikakami, Faylcan Kabiists, and Frianese Kabiists. While the Ikakami do not have much information on them, I believe they could be considered the Kabi Orthodox with the other two branches being ethnic-based splinter groups. The division between Faylcan Kabiists and Frianese Kabiists appears to be entirely doctrinal, with the color of their god being the main division. Which, on face value, sounds a tad silly as most doctrinal disputes throughout history have more to do with theological questions such as the nature of their God or entrance into the afterlife rather than the aesthetics of the God, but the factbook is still WIP so I will reserve judgement.

It is to be noted that, despite being a Democracy, the leader in charge is not a Kabiist or even a Shinto but is rather agnostic (which are no more than 2.9% of the population according to the factbooks). Statistically speaking, it is rare for such small minorities to become a leader in a democracy, so it could be a sign that Tamakuni is much more progressive than the rest of the world.

Ninja'd, Give me a sec

AN: Pianos are the primary export in the nation. However, the AN does not go into detail about why this is the case. This could mean that the ivory is a very common resource in the nation, the old material used in piano keys. However, given the Germanic origin of the nation, I find this to be unlikely. Perhaps it could be a consequence of a cultured upper-class within the nation, as (especially grand) pianos are often associated with a highly cultured form of the upper class not found in today's society. Or, it could be the opposite, it could be a subtle hint of how the nation sells itself out to richer powers in order to get itself wealthy, being the manufacturing hub for nations of a much higher status than it. Ooor, it could just be something picked at random and I am just overthinking it. I am honestly quite interested to see if the AN will ever expand upon it (not that the AN has to, just that I would be interested if they do).

That they had an ethno-based civil war with over one million died, and almost another million had committed suicide in space of 15 post-war years. That's an intriguing psychological issue rarely discussed. Does it have anything to do with PTSD of sorts?

Patagonia's leader, Konrad Svoboda, visited Pyongyang in the DPRK in 1970 and quickly became friends with Kim Il-Sung. Sung and Svoboda exchanged ideas, and went on to incorporate them into their constitutions, such as the expansion of Patagonia's military, and the adoption of a more futurist and refined Juche ideology in the DPRK.

New Transeurasia counts with four American provinces: Alaska, British Columbia, Washington and Oregon. The latter three were acquired after New Transeurasia emerged victorious in it's war against the Columbian Free State and engulfed the entirety of that country.
