Death penalty, along with anyone who received the weapons. The weapons are then to be returned to the rightful units.

Shoplifting a toothbrush from a convenience store because you saw that creepy old man your brother lied to you about while you were in his room while your family was preparing for your trip to France and subsequently running from a cop?

Fine that costs as much as the toothbrush or 30 minutes of community service.

Jumping onto a police officer and landing on him hard enough to kill him, while juggling illegal explosives, guns, narcotics, WHILE on narcotics.

Response: That's a lot of different crimes, but I imagine you'd be looking at least 20 years in prison (unless, of course, you actually killed the officer, in which case the sentence would probably be higher). Since this is such a complex crime, the punishment could range wildly depending on the quality of your lawyer.

Question: Supergluing googly eyes onto the front of a squadcar.

That would be more or less treated as vandalism of public property, but in such a minor case, you may just be let off with a warning or a fine covering the item's removal and repainting of the affected area.

That is, of course, depending on the type of officer that the car is assigned to.

It depends. If the defendent showed exceptional prowess in their endeavors The Administratum would offer a position in our elite forces as long as they plead guilty. Otherwise such offense is punishable with up to 5 years in one of our re-education facilities.

A fine alongside confiscation of said pet. The offender will be prohibited from further being in possession of any pets until his psychiatrist will find him able to do his duty to them. Repeated offense warrants corporal punishment and potentially even imprisonment.

Executions are forbidden by Saralonian law and presumably by the Geneva Conventions, so any perpetrators are to be turned over to stand for trials for violations of the Geneva Convention.

Generally speaking the owner of such land would approach the squatters and attempt to negotiate with them under what terms they'll be allowed to stay. Most likely, squatters will be tasked with taking care of the place and other stuff. It would be considered a crime to do otherwise, punishable by forced labor.
