"I don't want to start off on a fierce note, but I think it's time for a haircut, cabrón. A sociable personality like yours can make up for a lot, but that haircut is only going to condemn you to professional disappointment in my opinion, babe. Otherwise, I have to commend your appreciation for tea, it really is a marvelous beverage, especially when paired with a sharp tongue such as yours. That's not a gibe by the way, I actually happen to love crude humour. As a fellow student of morbid institutions, I have to say: excellent work with that asinine relic of a landlord. I always love a macabre twist, especially when rape is involved. Speaking of which, great job 'battering down the hatches' when it comes to earthquakes as well, my friend. Such rude, unpredictable nuisances, aren't they? As an architect, it's good to see that you're encouraging accountability by promoting accessible design/build information to the public. It's effectively useless in the event of actual litigation since this information would be documented anyways, but it's still a useful idea."

"It's very reassuring to see the extent at which you value the expansion of infrastructure. If only I could express how happy this makes me. I too have dreams of a better world for the commuter of the future, only your ideas seem to have a much easier time leaving the station of legislation than mine do. No harm of course, but count me jealous in that regard. I don't want to start sounding like a warm towellette here, but I do actually find the whole unsweetened bacchanalia of socialist fruit punch a little concerning to say the least. I won't lie and argue that it hasn't made you successful, but it's still not exactly a highball proposition as far as I'm concerned. Of course, with socialist philosophy comes... (Imitates trumpet fanfare) secularism! Which, er...well I won't get into that, but colour me impressed with your commitment to that. Look, when you get down to brass tacks, we're not so different, you and I. Sure, you're more than happy to give capitalism the finger, and I'm more than willing to b*tch slap the notion of environmentally conscious industrial-hygiene; but we all have to strike a balance somewhere, and with a world of crazies out there, you're not so bad..."

I doubt it's tough love to set up a whole cosmos as a grinding slave-factory, given that that deprives 'potential' from just about everyone not at the top. More likely it's an expression of power on his part. Which, given that this more or less seems to be a description of a novelist's dark fantasy, makes sense. Just wish Mister Brappy over here didn't feel the need to act so clever about it. If you wanna tell a story, fine, but don't go acting like you're all that for bothering to write it down. Opinion on the D.R.A.G.O.N
Status: Not Classified, for public's eye, if necessary

Would you have thought that - finally I get to meet an another supercomputer, who also is a leader of a country! Have my salutations by default, as the organics can be quite a pain to cooperate with and rely on. Ouch, even I find it quite challenging to wrap my processors around the extent of his power - being able to disintegrate other empires by just looking at them? That power level chart also screams "very overpowered". In other words, I think that there is some meta-irony within D.R.A.G.O.N's regime, as it takes the piss out of various FFT space empires which plague this multiverse. Let's see what you and your country have in its store, then!

Some of the intel pages were trash-tier, and the cities+planets looked kind of... generic for a space empire. Same for all the airplanes, robots, soldiers, and all that yada yada - just a short line explaining how they are the best units, and some images which sound like engineering nightmares. You have a physical form too? Better than what I have, I guess - at least you don't need someone to fight on your behalf, when your enemy is further from the range of your weapons and defense systems. Overall, I am neutral on them - they might not be the emperor of that empire, but I certainly can find more in common with them than with that organic Campbell.

RESPONSE FROM THE INSTITUTE

"Ah, so I am to describe my feelings on an extraterrestrial intelligence? Interesting. Nova, you're called, and your upbringing seems to be quite close to that of human children. Except, of course, the AI meddling and the robot nurses. And you were trained since teenagehood to be a member of the saucer crews. That should be good, to have a purpose.

Now, on your post-exile life. So, you and your captain messed up big time and you were captured by the imperialists. Impressive your resistance to their questioning, and even more impressive on how you still had a positive view of humanity after five years of captivity. I'd say we as a species are not a very welcoming lot. Tho your kind don't seem all that ethical either. Anyways, you, despite being an alien and a liaison on one of the most important relationships of all human history, were only given the rank of Ensign. Ah let me guess, the all mighty generals of the American nation were afraid of having a little woman telling them what to do. Powerful men never change, cowards one and all.

To end this recording, I'd like to compliment and thank you both on your service in defence of humanity's independence and on it's self preservation, which we ourselves seem not to be able to assure."

Guard-Commander Ilu, of all Hyrule

"Good day to you, your excellency Zara Amir.

(Low chuckle) I feel as if, for once I did not fail on the pronunciation of a foreign name like yours.

Nevertheless, to return to our focus, I must say to you that I am truly glad to make your acquaintance, and though I have been known at points to be less than honest, especially so compared to our Gracious Highness, Princess-Sovereign Zelda, I can say that such statement was given in all honesty. For I see a fellow being that has achieved and holds many a similarity to myself. In all honesty, you show yourself as stronger than I, that is truly worth of laud.

Your life, up to your relocation to this 'Res Publica' is one of true hardship, something that I could never claim in any seriousness I had. Conceived by lovers bound together in the hardships of forced labor, one that would eventually cost your father his life from exhaustion, it would have seemed that fate would have you face the same fate, after many and many years toiling for a tyrannical realm.. I shudder to think of it, and I would say it would be a fate Hyrule would face if the Twilight King had his way with the realm, but perhaps even the situation you found yourself in is worse than even the Twili's manic schemes. If it was anyone else, that would have indeed been destiny, but you persevered... It seems that you simply will not answer to no-one, and nothing. You take little of anyone else's issues with yourself, and you have the drive to right the many wrongs of your Realm.

Perhaps this is what drove you to successfully escape the tyranny of the regime you lived under to a better place, or otherwise such a personality developed after the fact. Either way, we share such a drive, do we not? I fought as Hyrule's protector when almost all my colleagues froze and couldn't muster the courage to do so themselves, your situation was similar. I will try and avoid making this statement on yourself a game of comparison, however...

I cannot comment very well on your current position under 'Res Publica', for much of what the place claims to be baffles me, just as this claim that you had been 'mechanically', 'genetically' and 'psychologically' modified, whatever this 'genetic' idea is supposed to entail. It seems mind-bogglingly advanced compared to Hyrule, it almost cannot be comprehended. Now, I could comment further, however it may be more sensible to leave such analysis here, before I end up writing a biography. To conclude, I see myself in you, ms Amir, and that is positive indeed... Should we ever meet, as unlikely as that seems, I assume that we could find common ground to enjoy our company with, even with either of our potential... Issues.

Farewell, Zara... May Hylia bless you, and your dedication to the good of it all.

"A Guard-Commander? Well, that's quite an interesting title there, isn't it? Well, aside from your young age of twenty eight years old, you've seem to earned the position yourself quite righteously, your valour, bravery, loyalty, and your stern opposition in the face of the enemy. Certainly any armies there would have been lucky to have you onboard! "What do I think about this 'Zelda' person? Well, I have read over the facts and information in connection with the leader of the land called 'Hyrule', and I admit I was taken aback. A princess who was blessed with great power and intelligence by the gods and goddesses in her world? In my world, no one was blessed with great power and intelligence by a divine being to become a great leader one day, but rather it was the individual's political and military skills, and the strength of "Talking about why we decided to base our society on ideology, rather than one leader. A strong leader, who is not "afraid to show force" aka. "take away all the freedoms" can form a cult of personality, which is not the case here. Build a nation and such, if he is competent. But then he dies, and his people are at a loss and fighting each other. Country collapses. Maybe right away. Maybe in decades. But collapses. I just wonder, what is his plan to prevent the collapse?

I don't exactly like him, or would support him, but at least he had managed to prove himself a competent ruler. Rebuilding war torn places is no easy feat and I commend on that. But the methods... But let's not speak about bad things, shall we? Let's just get some cold mojito and chill a lil' bit. Then I am gonna practice my aim at shooting range. Gotta keep myself in shape." -Shawn Bjomson

"It begs no surprise that Bjomson would dislike individuals who are actually trying to rebuild their nations instead of letting them fall further to anarchy and decay like Skyhooked has. It is a shame that he and has such a mindset and lifestyle. But nevertheless, Bjomson is born of his traumatic condition, and to attempt to persuade him out of it would just be a waste of time. It would serve better to take over his country and implement productive change for the better. Though I have not the interest in bothering with Human affairs. As that isn't my mission nor am I located anywhere near the Milky Way. Overall, my stance is negative as Bjomson is nothing more than wasted potential."

"Alright so I was told to come here and apparently react to leaders from other nations in other universes. Apparently it's 'fun' or something? Eh I'd rather be riding inside a Centurion but whatever I guess I have time.
Right, so what do we have here? Grand Overseer Viktor Von Stein, huh? Well, I read here that apparently you were born as a clone, being the genetic combination of... Emperor Ferrios and Emperor Charles von Roland? Well I haven't heard of either of them yet so I can't really judge either of them yet until I've met them, I guess. Whatever. Anyways, I honestly feel sorry for you, Viktor. Being a clone and all that? It's unfortunate you never have experienced any sort of childhood before. I mean, I might be only 17, but I fondly remember my own childhood with great joy. Also, you still had to be trained? That sounds... inefficient. If you were supposed to be a super-duper clone soldier or whatever, shouldn't you already have the fighting skill implemented inside your brain already? Ah, what do I know. I'm only a genius scientist, I certainly don't have any grounds in this.

...Okay now what the heck is this supposed to mean??? WHO WROTE THIS? Either write in proper english or mandarin or something! Just something a NORMAL PERSON can comprehend! The only part I could comprehend is 'the common populace is too incompetent to be trusted' and to that I say: And what makes you qualified to rule, huh? You think you're so dang smart or something? Maybe it's because you were ""born"" into priveledge or whatever, but social-darwism??? Really, that crappy theory?? ALL MEN ARE CREATED EQUAL, VIKTOR. NO MATTER WHATEVER YOU WERE FED WHEN YOU WERE BRAINWASHED DURING YOUR TRAINING

Jeez! I got all worked up over this guy! Now where the heck is Eureka? This was her idea after all, I need to tell her how frustrating it actually was!"

"Yunru is simply a person who wants freedom for all, you could argue otherwise due to her Dengist with a hint of Maoism but even that is nowhere near as bad as mind control. Her dedication to liberating the world is commendable and her strengths suggest that she might be divine intervention. Not many people can claim to have 200 IQ and that IQ has clearly been put to good use with the invention of various new pieces of equipment.

Though I also feel that she is kind of sus, remember that Dengist-Maoism thing, she does want to spread the workers revolution though I fear this might mean the creation of a one world Marxist-Leninist state, and I have not found a single Marxist-Leninist state to have a "decent" track record of civil liberties or human rights and in a way it contradicts her anti-imperialist ambitions because this is in a way imperialism, just under a different banner.

If she does insist on spreading the workers revolution at least allow different types of socialism, not just the one party marxist state."
