Bastille...
Alt-J...
The new Eminem album...
Some Marilyn Manson...
A few piano songs...

I have a pretty large collection of music from different genres. I recommend checking out [Alt-J - Tessellate] and [Bastille - Bad Blood] if you want to hear something new.

King: Jonathan Saurel - Queen: Miana Saurel - Leading Political Ideal: Centrist

The King is kind of a dick. Don't tell Him I told you that.

Strangely enough, I barely know anything about any of those despite the fact I know every single name.

John Grant - GMF

In my top 5 songs of the year probably. I don't know how it works quite so well, it just really does.

Pérotin "Alleluia nativitas"

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EJxRDhejtwo>

There is that airy, ethereal quality that Pérotin has that most music just does not have. It's great music to relax to.

Both were replaced though. Aaand I haven't listened to other songs by them, I really should get into that some time, I'm just too damn lazy to do it.

...This really does seem kind of weak for them. I don't mind a band evolving out of things like metal at all, but turning into a Japanese pop rock band doesn't seem like a particularly very good way to go, in the sense that the 'j-pop', 'j-rock' style is usually bland and generic.

I would say it is better than most stuff in that style I've heard, but still.

Boris-Hope

Though the female singer sounds better in the style.

I liked this one when I heard it, but the rest of the album compared to it doesn't do much for me so far.

Though they do mix things interestingly.

The next thread of this type should have a change in the title, if you ask me. "What music are you listening to right now?" as a base title should help against nonsensical posts about people listening to dogs barking and similar stupidity.
