Hey fellas, a "cliché". Ooh, a cliché? Well, la-di-da Mr.Frenchman.

Wee wee French magnifico madame.

Okay, on a more slightly serious note: alternate history countries that are nominally alternate history countries. For example, a country based on the United States of America except America is replaced with 'Fredonia', thusly it is officially the 'United States of Fredonia', and the history of the United States of Fredonia is just the same as the USA in real life, with Fredonia replacing America and Fredonian replacing gun nut citizens.

Alternate history countries are dumb fun and I love them. But are you having a difficult time doing alternate history countries right, and making them all believable? Well...

Are "hypotheses" becoming a cliché? I notice past threads like that "The British Get M16s" thread, thinking it's recent news that the British Army are replacing their British-made assault rifles with American-made ones. But, nope, it wasn't.

Honestly, I've never gotten the appeal of most of those type of threads, it sorta seems to just total out to "What if wacky thing relating strangely commonly to Britain becoming stronger happened but we orphaned the idea in a thread instead of making a nation about it"

So these "hypothetical" scenarios threads are just downright ridiculous and out-of-touch of reality. He and I are alike, except I have no incentive to start discussions with people OOCly in NSG.

I got several of the images I've used (on Las Palmeras, it's banners and flags) that have catgirls with historically accurate Victorian maid uniform from some artist I saw on Danbooru (so yeah, Resilient Acceleration is right). Then again, I can't tell if obsessively drawing catgirls with prudish maid uniforms who prepare seafood is an oddly specific kink for the artist.

The same can be said of Ateria's flag-waifus. I'm almost certain I recognize the creator as a Korean Twitter artist that specifically draws girls in WW1-era uniforms.

TL;DR: The willpower of obsessive people beats NSFW sometimes.

Forget all of those HEAT-sealing missiles and other anti-aircraft systems, just kamikaze an aircraft carrier like it's Midway.
