I think this place actually spawned a cycle of a sort of arms race, as I've seen multiple nations basically have weapons just for F-7, or made because of what they saw here.

Tbh I just sorta grab and take from reality, the Cold War made some wild shit lnfaa.

For space I just take stuff from shows/art I like. I only have real stats for the macross stuff cuz I site had it, otherwise the real value of a vessel is how much you can rp with it.

Since we're on the topic of huge empires, huge empires where all of the pieces are friendly and nice to each other and don't hate their guts, have border disputes, hate the imperial powers above them, hate each other's accents, engage in racism, have secession movements, military deserters, any visible strain on services like healthcare and welfare especially after large-scale wars, have massive swaths of area that are simply unenforceable because of the sheer amount of manpower that would demand, have internal logistics that can take days or weeks, the vast distances generating a broad spectrum of different cultures based on even just stuff like geography, what plants and animals are available, climate, and the values of the specific people that settled them, let alone how that might have intermingled with the people that would be already living there...

I think HSE is the perfect anti-thesis to that cliché.

There is a lot of petty fighting all the time, and they are only generally unified due to some common upper culture, a shared auxiliary language, and religion.

I usually ignore the hating each-other unless its part of the RP/lore, but we DID remove all the healthcare and public education, so we dont have to worry about that. And the citizens are feudal farmer and fishers. Now can someone explain to me why the average lifespan is 35, I just can't seem to comprehend.

This is why my only nation that is a massive empire is specifically designed to be ridiculous from the very basic concept.

It's a huge empire (but not a 'has conquered the entire world' one) that's entirely centered around K-pop and Korean girl groups.

It's supposed to be ridiculous.

This is what irks me about the European empire with significant overseas colonies surviving to 2022 nations. They just assume all their colonies want to be controlled by Spain or Germany or whatever regardless of how culturally different they might be and have no secession movements, or if they do they're minor with near zero popular support.

To be fair only in the summiest of accounts you see colonies being directly ruled by Europe willingly and without any problems, and those accounts usually don't worldbuild based on what makes sense

I don't see an interest place, so I'll just do it here. An F7 death battle thread. basically you pick two nations(preferably NS one, though maybe one could be non-NS), who are roughly of equal power/theme(don't set the Mt nation against the FanT dimensional mages or FFT super empire), and see what would happen if they clash. preferably each post would have a small description of what makes a nation threatening/different from the opponent(Nation a has hyper-drive missile, nation B has the deathstar). The rules for posting would be that you either discuss the above nation and suggest no new nation, in which case the discussion stays to the last death battle, or you do you opinion then in the same post at the end make a new pairing. I would heavily recommend the use of {reserved}, and would also say people should clarify if they plan to reserve and make a new death battle, or just give their opinion, the latter case which would allow other people to continue posting freely.

Roleplaying as political parties basically.

I'll admit it was certainly a unique RP concept but yeah I'm glad the days of half the threads in F7 being NSG Senate ones are long gone cuz the mods decided that it was an RP and therefore should be in P2TM and that means it only gets two threads instead of like 50.
