Yall wanna know something (jokingly) horrible about NationStates?

Max has literally said, on video, that The Political Compass is what inspired the creation of NationStates.

This entire game is just a political compass meme.

I mean, NS being a political compass meme actually kind of makes sense

I mean I see why people do it, it's easy. Hell, I don't remember anything specific but I probably did it as part of my early Initiative work. It shoves what it's trying to say right in the reader's face and as I said before, it's easy and at first, it works. It stops working once you see the same damn thing a dozen times. Now personally I feel like the issue here is pacing. In a very generalized example of the "haha look at the dimensional horror beyond your comprehension despite the fact that you're comprehending it right now" logbook, everything just feels so immediate and disconnected though this might have more to do about the base concept rather than the writing conveying that concept. It, whatever that might be is usually an eldritch monstrosity, some big scary dimension, or something else that an audience is supposed to be immediately terrified of. This, I personally do not like. I don't like it because it throws a lot of the writing leading up to it in the trash, someone could scroll down to the bottom of the factbook and just say "oh, that's what they were trying to do". Very rarely on NS do you see fridge horror done right. That sinking realization at the end of a good series of dispatches or whatnot that all those little things that you once thought were insignificant add-up to something truly terrifying in the context of the writing is something I wish to see done.

Hell if I know where I was going with this mini-rant. td;dr, make your writing mean something.

And when they do fridge horror, it really falls flat and carries no weight.

Like, for example, I'm an alien overlord from another dimension and I introduce myself to the human race in a threatening manner and I'm gonna assimilate your species. The threatening manner is exaggerated to the point it's just like a little kid trying to scare you.

Or I'm an ever-expanding evil clone of SkyNet and I just repeat the lines "Become One of Us, Become One of Us" over and over again. It's just...eugh.

There's so much to do with characters that possess actual character with positive and negative traits.

I find that cliché very tiring, very fast. But I'm biased. I'm a former social-studies student. The "zoo hypothesis" and aliens studying humans like anthropologists study "primitive" societies has always interested me, in contrast. Simply because the ridiculous high maintenance of secrecy makes one think of a crap-ton of justifications and scenarios as how to aliens are covered up. Or how and why aliens or any other eavesdropper would be motivated or tempted to act in secrecy.

I wanna make Montse a generic F7 war-hero...and a sex offender. By today's standards. Maybe I just want to test people's standards after I read about Disney couples' age gaps.

I'd make the Noissons something more detailed like this, but these take two hours to make

I have a big problem with nations being unable to carry their historical weight. If you're going to be Nazi Germany, be Nazi Germany, but for 5h3 love of God make it make sense. If you just say "Nazis but not Nazis!!!" It just seems half-assed. Make it make sense: a coup, or anything! And the same goes for the USSR, or any country with a bloody and controversial history: you gotta take it in your stride, instead of just tossing aside pretty much decades of history because you don't like it. Build up from the bottom if you want, but damn it if you want to have an alt-history Germany where they won the war, you need to acknowledge that they did some messed up stuff afterwards, or how the USSR put people into work camps because they didn't clap hard enough, or oppression of natives in post-colonial states, or ANYTHING to make it that little bit more realistic.

Since I can CLEARLY understand that this is directed at me, I suppose, I have to answer.

First of all, Laka Strolistandiler is not a "Nazis but not Nazis". As I've stated multiple times, there are nazis and they play a secondary part in the nations politics, but they're far away from being anywhere close to being a defining characteristic of the country. Secondly, Nazi German didn't won a war in any sensible way- if you call a ceasefire that essentially simply postponed their defeat a winning than you probably don't understand what winning a war means. Finally, I DO roleplay oppression of the locals in colonized state, however, I also roleplay Laka sinking in countless amounts of supply to maintain these colonies and help the locals achieve some level of civilization.

Well, I was previously accused of my nation being too nazi-ish (and the stallhelm-wearing wojak doesn't help it lol), and one of my most recent replies on the forums was essentially me explaining how in my IC universe nazis and Waffen SS still exist, so it was only logical to assume that he saw my post and decided to write this. Well, sometimes logic really fails me...

It refers to how during the summer and other times when school is out, we get a surge of new low effort posters which disappear almost as soon as school starts up again.

I've never heard that specific term before but I think it's referring to NS Summer.

Summerposters are the people who can't be super active during the school year because... school. So they come on during summer break when they have time off to play NS. They're inexperienced, but that does not necessarily correlate to how long they've been on the site. I've seen summerposters who've been on this site for years (albeit probably while under 13 against NS's TOS. most of them are like 13 or 14) and they still haven't learned anything. Generally they make shitty, one line replies to other players in F7 games and try to jump into every military RP or make 800 RP threads themselves. They constantly interject themselves where they are not wanted. Some people have sympathy for them because they're "just trying to learn the game" but the problem is that most of them will throw their shitty work across the site for many years before they either get DOSed or mature and realize that they've really not done a very good job and try to improve somewhat. The former happens much, much more often.

Idk man, I use NS even if schoolwork is immense 🤔. In all seriousness though, I can understand why summerposters are a thing, maybe, just maybe, summerposters can be avoided by maybe being able to find a way to let NS life and outside-NS life coexist?

It's not necessarily that. It's that most summerposters are 13-ish. Some are even under 13. They are incredibly inexperienced and make extremely low effort RPs. Not every school aged person is a bad RPer, but the ones who flood in during the summer usually are. Remember that "War forever lol" saga just today? That's the starting gun for NS Summer.

True true, but you know what, as a 14 year old NSer; I advise against war RPs instead focus on economics and sports, the real fun stuff.

That's the difference between you and the average summerposter. Summerposters just see International Incidents and start drooling. They jump into as many RPs as possible without having factbooks, and 99% of their posts are on-liners.

It's not as much about age as it is about maturity. Younger players can be effortposters, and older players can be summerposters.
