9 times out of 10, it would be politely ignored by the police. If you get arrested for so, you'd probably be charged with first-degree murder and with a life in prison, thou you'd probably get a pardon if so.

The last person to be charged with this crime received the death penalty, however this was just before Tangatarehua abolished capital punishment. So most likely, a whole-life order (life in prison without parole).

Not a crime on its own, however if it's a repeated offence then a charge of disorderly conduct may apply which usually involves a hefty fine (around 200,000 Kohutus/NSD$10,000) and a night in the cells.

Not a crime itself, but if violent or disturbing peace can be charged for other crimes such as incitement, espionage, conspiracy against the republic (never used since criminalized in 1911) or high treason (last conviction in 1947).

i mean... its still murder. If you kill it straight after he harmed your daughter you will get self defence recognized, otherwise you are punished as a murderer (20-30 years or life in jail), even if you will likely be one of the few cases where parole will still be available.

Generally speaking, assuming you do not act in self-defence, you will be sentenced to 20 years and paroled after 10-15 years. If you arrest and turn the pedo to the police however, he get life without parole by default.

Train Robbery?

Theft and robbery aren't exactly illegal. Property is defined as what you can claim and defend so if someone else robs you, it's theirs now you wimp. Granted, the owners of the train line (most likely either Houses Carthenay or Zethu) are likely to take issue with being robbed and retaliate.

Depends. If you did it willingly it's public indecency and you'll be charged with anything from a week of community service to a month in prison. If you didn't do it willingly and was an accident, and you can prove as such in Protectorate Court, you're free to go.
