They drive on the right side of the road!

Okay, okay. They seem to have a pretty diverse federal legislature (in terms of parties), and the governing coalition consists of four different parties. Since they are a federal republic, though, some laws are left up to provincial and district legislatures (up to 2nd level districts) to decide on.

They must be going by two different names according to their "Political Parties" factbook, with the Democratic Republic of Toshavo and the Communist Federation of Misthas. However, in their government, the Democratic Socialist Party makes up 236 out of 650 seats in their state parliament, and coalition with the "March for Tashavo" Party they have a total of 413 seats making up the government. The opposition holds around 237 seats in total and is split among 5 parties and 1 group of independents.

Their nation was a byproduct of a global catastrophe, an outbreak of a rare virus; and the resulting world is generally deranged.

AN: The political society they operate under is pretty developed in terms of legal limitations and freedom of expression. The revolution undertaken has succeeded in its aspects to create a better America.

To simplify, despite having a relatively functioning legislative process, they're -like any other socialist state- inevitably a Single-Party State that is de jure a federation but de facto ruled from the Capital.

They are founded upon Council Communism and Soviet Democracy. Workplaces there are organized democratically and all work is handled based on a system of "from each according to their ability, to each according to their need."
