"I... never thought I would feel so much for an eldritch monster larger than galaxies. And yet I do. What a tragic existence. Whether it is in Azavir's past or future, at some point it finds itself completely alone in the whole universe, having fulfilled its design as a weapon but failed its conviction to protect life. What could be more tragic than to have both succeeded and failed in your purpose for existing? And to, as a result, be utterly alone? I find solitude and loneliness particularly frightening. Perhaps it comes from growing up in a Confucian-influenced society built on sociality and interdependence. Perhaps it comes from my religious background, as in my particular Christian tradition, there is a school of thought that believes God's work can best be understood as a war on loneliness. God found our disembodied intelligences scattered across the cosmos, and he clothed us with spirits and eventually with mortal bodies in order to make it possible for us to see each other, speak with each other, know each other, and love each other. Azavir's story runs in the opposite direction, has opposite results, so to me especially its fate seems tragic. To be the last thing existing in the whole universe—what could be sadder?"

So who do I have to talk about next? Some guy in armor. Its looks pretty nice, wish we had some of those, but anyway. So you are apparently called "the Gharkost" and nobody really knows your real name. I don't know about you but I think that transparency is pretty important for leadership, but anyway. So you were apparently exiled for the crime of... something. Don't know what because you don't really make it clear. Next part of your bio has you talking about the fake truth that you made up where you got a scar because of a war, and in the next one, you talk about the real truth. When I read that, I expected to finally get to know what crime you committed. But no, it only says that it was really bad and unforgivable and "betraying your own people". So the only thing that I can conclude is that your crime was actually treason. Maybe collaboration or something. Which while bad, I expected it to be a bit worse than that. My final conclusion is that I don't think I can give you a good judgement because I still don't really know anything about you. What I can say is that I don't think leaders should be so mysterious about anything, and that maybe you should open up more.

"While I can stand behind his more democratic based ideals, I am appalled and confused by his supposedly anti-imperial actions and stance. He states that he despises 'Imperialism', yet this GDI he leads annexes smaller nations, threatens them with nuclear weapons, or flatout used nukes to push their ideology and bully them into submission. I wholeheartedly condemn that sort of behavior. It is the duty of larger nations to respect the neutrality of smaller nation-states, and if necessary, defend those stances. Ultimately, while I do agree with some of the points raised by the 'Supreme Commander', I cannot, and will not, endorse his more tyrannical nature and actions."

"This man is a moral conundrum in his own right... he commits horrible atrocities upon the native Turks not for their faith, but on basis of race and subjugating them to forced labour. Was slavery, ethnic persecution and forced labour, and I quote, not the very thing African-Americans and their diaspora have been fighting against for ages? Perhaps if you had not taken such an aggressive stance and tried to instead cooperate and influence your neighbours with a few wars of defense from time-to-time, you could have intergrated under the Christianity you so bravely convert to. Speaking of which, have you truly repented for your sins of greed and pride, as well as your inexcusable attitude towards those of miscellaneous ethnicity? And I thought... Damascus... looked bad for the Catholic image... but enough of that. I will not chastise you, and I will perceive you as a comrade despite your past endeavours, but remember that God is watching, and he will pass his own true judgement whether or not you hold any sense of regret for the things you've done. I know I've done some misdeeds, and when I look back, I regret them... do you?"

"Personally, I find Jaguar to be an interesting case... if his claims of being a god of the Roman pantheon are to be true, then he was truly raised in an unorthodox and violent world, worshipped by an entire empire, so it would be clear he is inclined towards conquest, even if he has to get his fellow gods involved. I will not stop him, for I find him to be a reasonable and human entity and will respect his desires, but I only have this to advise for Mr. Aquilion; while I applaud you for battling your inner demons and striving them at bay while dedicating yourself for becoming a force at bay, I advise to avoid violence and conquest at the expense of both your people and the occupied, even if you yourself are fixated on your goals. And fixation it is that plagues you greatly, for you may that determination can be your greatest strength, but also your

Grenux Zix, founder of the AFS

Shan-lin seems like a pretty wise leader. He is apparently part of a group of superpowered monks who lives on an island and successfully fought off multiple invasion attempts because of their superpowers. I have no idea how you got those powers, because you were born before genetic engineering or cyborgs were a thing, so I'm going to assume that your world has magic or something. I also had read in there that you thought about how that after you die people would eventually forget your name. I don't think you should really worry about that. You'd be too dead to care about it, or too busy being enlightened in the afterlife in your case. I've also read here about your pacifism. While I don't believe that pacifism is always the best stance to have towards conflict, you at least seem to know when to use violence, like when your island gets invaded. So my final conclusion is that Earth religion can be pretty weird. Sitting on the ground, closing your eyes and trying to get enlightened isn't really something I've expected from "Buddhism" But hey, its better then a lot of religions that I've come across, like Ultra-Galactica Worship which is for some reason still a thing. But anyways, it was nice to... meet you?

And here we have the freedomfighter, brought to fame by the bodies he stacked. I love it. He is a bit unorthodox, yet, his past is highly decorated in honor and war in an unhonorable war! Even if he is of the future and also alien, at least he has his priorities right. It makes me wonder though, just uh, does he train troops himself? Since, well, he is a leader, but it just makes me wonder that. I suppose he did, in the past, yes, but regardless! A decorated veteran with no guilt, plus all the drive needed to lead a country! A shame he's probably going to be hunted across entire star systems for his past slights, not that it really matters. Ha! As if it would matter. Infamy carries the same weight as fame, both of which are about equal to gold.

"Admirable in his revitalisation of his nation... a kind government is always more stable than a cruel one. Shur'an clearly possesses a measure of strategic knowledge and political aptitude not held by... too many world leaders. The man is clearly practiced in appeasing a tormented people, while distancing himself from the rigid, traditional formalism of the modern ruling class. There's an old Cherian saying: A thoughtful man can ponder solutions to the problems of the past; A clever man can solve the problems of the present; but only the wisest man can prevent the problems of the future. Not enough people think like that anymore..."
