Palmeras has a special relationship with Spain, their former colonizer, to the point that they would call them daddy the Father Nation. But I wonder though, what do they think of Franco? Were they sympathetic to the Republicans?

Currently, Libya and the (former) Brazilian province of Rio Grande do Sul are independent states under control of Germans and their descendants after the end of World War II. Erwin Rommel for some reason became a Libyan and somehow made his way up to become its ceremonial Sultan, while in Rio Grande, a German Southamerican Society controls the territory to serve German interests, somewhat reminiscent of the AOG in Kaiserreich in my opinion.

Anyways, I had a small but lengthy laugh while reading your factbooks. They're absurd, but really cool at the same time. Great work, man.

For some reason, the US broke up in the 1870s because of how "brutal" the North had been during the war of Southern Aggression. The breakups started in Texas after some retarded secessionist was allowed to run for office in 1876, and finally ended when Louisiana seceded in 1927.

The city-state has been under the control of several larger countries, including Poland, Prussia, the German Empire and the Soviet Union. Also it was originally created to give Poland access to a large port even though at the time the majority of the population was ethnically German.

The 21-years war started when Spetnaz units deployed by the USSR in Saigon discovered a conspiracy to overthrow the USSR and the United States in a mass worldwide revolution and then promptly beamed it to the UN, getting the UNSC to organize an extremely xenophobic, pretty much genocidal ad hoc military to "Deal with" the so-called supernatural threat.

Well, uh...

- Gdansk Danzig became independent thanks to the Treaty of Versailles
- The difference between IRL is that it was not annexed into (Nazi) Germany but rather invaded by Poland instead
- Then the Soviet arrived
- But then it was freed unlike IRL and free until today
- It might be smol but it is economically stronk
- It also has its own military and appears to be involved in major modern conflicts too
- Overall stronk for its size

Apparently, the word "Nacrad" comes from Russian "na krai", or "on the borderlands", which I personally doubt given that their "geological"^[sic] location is far from any Russian borderland, unless of course this can be explained in the future. The second etymology makes a bit more sense given it comes from a native language. Their President, oddly enough, sounds to be of British descent, given his name. A lot of their cities have English name instead of Chinese ones, which tells me they were colonised by the British Empire some time ago. Their population is also 30% Muslim; this extremely high concentration I find really odd, for the Muslim peoples of China are located far, far west of their location; this is not mentioning the high concentration of Jews, as well. Christians I can perhaps believe, if the British were so inclined in converting the populace.
