U2 - Mysterious Ways.

Well, classic rock is a pretty broad term. I don't consider U2 classic rock, but like I said, it's broad. The Fly was pretty big in 1991 apparently.

The Beatles - You Never Give Me Your Money

Here is an article from fivethirtyeight live on what is or isn't "Classic Rock" based on playlists and statistical analysis.

It is very interesting that Green Day is now showing up and U2 has been there quite awhile. Just the facts.

Green Day - Wake Me Up When September Ends

Interesting. I find it's true that radio stations have their own character. A lot of times, I listen to the "70s, 80s, 90s" station and they never play Nirvana, for example. And sometimes they go out of their range and play songs from the 60s and 2000s.

Nirvana - Jesus Doesn't Want Me For a Sunbeam

From: MTV Unplugged In New York (1994)
Genre: Alternative rock

Cover of the original by The Vaselines.

In those cases, these stations may be following a certain producer's career (think Eno) or a specific long lived musician's evolution (think David Bowie), some DJs really get into that, keeps them from getting bored.

Maybe. They do play U2 and I think sometimes Bowie. Also, there's a law that states stations need to play a certain amount of Canadian music or something like that, so there are also a lot of Canadian artists.

Radiohead - Karma Police

From: OK Computer (1997)

They also never play Radiohead, but I guess they're not popular enough?

There are so many of them, best not to think they are all Canadian, eh? Unfortunately most of them today are owned by jerks like Clear Channel and have rigid playlists. I think DJs are artists in their own rights and sculpt out a message by playing personally chosen songs in a certain order to convey a message. This unfortunately threatens corporations because it involves free thought by a lower echelon employee and threatens their power structure and complete mind control agenda...so damn sad...perhaps I have said too much, perhaps I have said the truth! AHHHHH!
