"The Council was under the impression this channel was for the leaders of the various nations that can join in contacting this place. This Omiya however seems to only lead her own schoolwork studies. To make things brief, most of our members do not even seem to know how to respond to such a being. Talk of magical plagues and alternate worlds, of time slowing and stopping, all are certainly interesting, but at the center is merely a schoolchild. No matter what age they may reach, so long as a people are not led by their hand, The Council has little to say.

We cannot glean enough from their memories to determine a political, economic, or social standard to base them off of. Simply stories about them and their sister, and the world around them. But we are not on this Council for entertainment, we are hear to learn from, learn about, and possibly even emulate some of the traits of beings unlike ourselves. But a schoolchild has

It is clear in the history of the development of socialist ideology that the construction of a proletarian-led society should not be marked by prolonged division of supreme executive power; the Council of the Burrow Republics fails here, as it fundamentally cannot recognise the fundamental reality of that which exists beyond its own innate liberalism; it is a revisionist body.

« Sigh »

Regardless, I suppose it is necessary for me, then, to go over the principal actor between these discount-store "socialists", as they were; their misinterpretation of socialist "egalitarianism", the rabid disdain for the proletarian dictatorship as they open their arms to degenerate forms of religious-ideology; et cetera.

Janius is a failed, weak female. She marks herself with the taint of liberal-progressivism, and has become the foremost advocate of reactionary LGBT-ideology in the Union. I believe she is the single actor who, mustering the most violently radical-liberal tendencies "socialism" has to offer, is going to pave the path to counter-revolution and ultimately decompose all revolutionary potential still borne by what was a once-promising socialist state. That said, the council she serves on is not beyond saving. It still bears within it the principles, foundationally at least, which mark it as decidedly anti-imperialist and revolutionary in the classical sense.

If the embittered proletariat can prevent counter-revolution by removing Janius and her robotic pet, the UCBR may still be saved.

"Nova is certainly an intriguing character, coming from a background quite different than most. I myself cannot quite imagine what growing up in a society like the Air Domain would be like, and how it might shape one's perspective. In some ways her society is similar to the one we are trying to create, but I would that our efforts would result in something a bit less... repressive, shall we say. I suppose I am grateful that she has thus far deterred an invasion of Earth by her people, and is prepared to intervene in the event of a nuclear war. Still, I would have preferred it if her people were less elitist and so self-assured of their superiority, and I am pleased that she seems to realise that to some extent. Our peoples could achieve much if we worked together as equals."

"It is not the Libertarian's goal to limit the powers of the government to be free and left alone? And not bother anyone else? Isn't that what a Libertarian is? I suppose with this Redmonger it's just a word to separate him from the other variates of his party members and pretend to be different from them. Not surprising that is how politicians behave to draw out the masses that demand something new and innovating when it's just the old with a new print job. But I won't fully write him off entirely as a false populist. He has implemented measures to limit the central government's role in the Socialist Economy by giving more control to unions or councils to dictate the flow of the market without the Father-State serving as the guiding hand of industry and progress. I congratulate him for that originality compared to others.

Otherwise, I find it interesting that he allegedly stands against Imperialism while also being Imperialist himself. He seeks to undermine countries that don't share his viewpoints to the point that they fall into chaos and are forced to accept his way of thinking. That is quite Imperialistic, do you not see the irony or even the hypocrisy of your intentions? But nevertheless, I won't condemn him for such actions. He is just another player in the game of politics who seeks to come out on top even though I do have my doubts about such chances of victory.

Overall, he is a decent ruler, and if he does win. I'll congratulate him and welcome him as either a rival or friend once his Order enters the Galactic Political Arena."

"I know many on this site will have their own opinions on you. But, I shall not be angry towards you. I can see past that exterior of menace and violence. I see, beneath all of that, a man who has lost his home. You're the last of your kind, a man who has lost everything. My people may not be gone, but I know plenty who have had similar fates. The Beothuk, Mayaca, and Ais of America, long gone now. There must have been a doomed man or woman out there from their tribes with a story just like yours. They must have felt what you have felt. Anger, grief, fear, a desire to make things right, to destroy those who stood against them and bring glory to their now doomed people. But that is not how you rebuild a civilization, nor how you bring it back to glory. Your empire is made of yourself, an island of your own creation. There are but scared species below you, and maybe it may seem that is what you want. But you will never feel love through fear and reverence. You cannot build a civilization off the backs of only slaves. Your world, your people, will remain but a shell guided by nothing but hate. There will be no art, no science, no music, no love - only a bitterness towards the world that took everything away. And it shall remain that way so long as you continue your aggression.

I cannot demand that you move away from your path, it is not of my own will to do such a thing. But let me ask you this. Do you want your people's glory back, or do you want your people back? If you want their glory back, then you will not find it by ceaseless conquest. When your empire is left to dust by the millions of other future-tech space empires out there, your kind will be remembered for your actions, that of violence and death - not glory and conquest. They will not be remembered for their accomplishments, both grandiose and simple, they will be remembered for being another faceless empire in a sea of them. And if you want your empire back, then this is not the way. Civilizations are built on shared values and culture, and all you have been doing is subjugating planets through fear, not through the spread of ideals and morals. I shall tell you this then. The best way to preserve one's culture is not to violently spite everything, but to learn to make peace with the universe, for as dark and violent as it may be, you can still make your own light in the dark. "

Frankly I do not have very much to say, but I am going to be very straightforward in my personal opinion on this 'Nova': I do not trust her right away like all the rest do. Perhaps I am saying this because of my experience with some former allies who betrayed Russia to the Reds. She is a stranger, a foreigner from another world we do not fully know of, and because of these things, I do not see myself interacting with her in person any time."

"His leadership is without vision or guidance just regression and more regression to temporary hold back the menace that ruined his Motherland. It is predictable by this observation the "Republic" he rules will be overcome by insurgents and fall to the Bolsheviks that he fought so hard against. If the people don't have reason to support him and justify the iron-handed regime that they are governed by, however, that can change. If the Major swallows that distrustfulness of foreigners not fully, of course, he has every right to be skeptical as I see that he was betrayed by them. But the Empire of Alkdor, more importantly, the Ministry for Science & Technology would be willing to cooperate with him on his terms to give him a vision that will benefit his people and perhaps lead to the slaying of the menace that ruined his once great Russia. Although if my Majesty disagrees, this can just be done under the table and be rectified with fruitful results.

BN, if you don't see the Emperor in this post. That means you don't do him, duh.

"I get it, the most thoroughful test, he will run on me in his lab would be related to reproductive system. Sure, I am rather smart and cunning dude, but let's face it, I ain't exactly scientist type to do scientific researches or discovering new scientific laws or loopholes for those existing, so I might not be exactly the best candidate for lab dude, unless he wants me to drink random colorful chemicals or push beautiful buttons, which make pretty lights and crazy sounds, or slay, pelt and eat some dangerous specimen from vivarium... Just kidding. I do have some knowledge of science, which I learned during resting between battles though... useful for enhancement and diversification of combat tactics. Besides, I look better in either my combat armor or metalhead/beach attire combination, than in a lab coat.

As for me being the prodigy... that's why we have the Refreshing dance. A serie of challenges, created to seek out most gifted and versatile people. Sometimes, the council might let an individual, who distinguished himself during this ceremony, to become one of them.

PMT/Early FT - Decopunk. Zitragrad is a crowned republic in a planet somewhere else in the universe. The formerly wartorn nation keeps a facade of normalcy and order while enjoying the societal and cultural decadence that marks the new Roaring Twenties. The paranoid authoritarian government tries its best to uphold order in the face of uncertainty, while its people want nothing more than a breathing space. A deal that works, but maybe not in the long run. |

"I was like you once, a runaway refugee from the Huns. Have I told you this fairytale country they call Czechoslovakia? I lived there when I was born until the Huns had to arrive. Your stay in Vichy molded you with the right mindset of valuing science and Futurism above petty nationalism and liberal democracy. One's a barrier for progress and the other a government of showmanship. Together, with me by your side, we can liberate the world from the tyranny of Reality itself. We are born in two different worlds but we are made for each other. You don't have to run and fight for scraps when you have me at your side... I believed that I hate the Huns and only the Huns as a child... Now, I hate all of you equally. Who are not like me."

Konrad... well, h-he's... I think he's quite handso- « ahem » hands-off in his so-called governance. I think he's a spectacular yet odd man. I despise him - yes, I do, I do indeed, he's a degenerate who ran from Comrades who were right to try and oppress the little bastard - but at the same time he is of such an... intriguing character. He is a madman, a leader of nothing but the filth and spiritual hatred he douses himself in, a man who wrote a toilet-paper constitution that means fuck-all. Yet I cannot help but respect the futurist allure of his society; the desire to tear down that which had existed, tear it down like the rotten facade it is, tear it down as your enemies cover, tear it all apart!

I just wish he was less needlessly, mindlessly, hopelessly destructive in his revolutionary tendencies. I want to like him. I really do. I just know he's a bastard and a reactionary at that. He needs to be put in his place.
