Man then eats the remaining toast, politely sips his tea, and finishes his coffee. Then, bows to the twitching body of the Siberian assassin and heads out of the alleyway to go to work.

Saul Goodman annihilates Man's company by carefully maneuvering through legal procedure.

Man is awarded 1.5 billion dollars. Then...

Man uses the money to build a multinational conglomerate with offices in 20 different countries, in competition with a company called Goodenough Global, headquartered in the United States. The only reason the company existed was to steal intellectual property from other multinationals and sell it to the unsuspecting.

(This is the only time I will be slightly 'egotistical' I'm not amazing at piano, but I love teaching, so-) I become Man's Piano teacher, and teach him how to play the finest classical compositions.

Man is shocked at how small 18th century pianos are when he tries to reach a note from a song he knows, yet finds that the note is missing. (they typically had 61 keys back then, F1-F6 or similar)

Mozart: I think we need more notes to be available to make this fair.

Man and Mozart both travel in time forward 100 years, and somehow they meet Franz Liszt.

Date: 4/5/1878, at least some pianos by now have the full A0-C8 range
