"not very often i get to see another dragon, though i am rather curious on whether or not she has a more 'full dragon' form... anyway, she is extremely devoted to her faith, which is more than admirable. even to the point i am rather curious to know more about it myself, as this is not something i have ever heard of before even in my long existence in the multiverse... she is against capitalism, which is always something i approve of. same goes with the disapproval of democracy... my only negative is her desire to kill those who do not follow her beliefs. if i was to follow a religion or cause, i would want to be taught it with some good solid proof and reasoning behind it, only then would i follow such with undying loyalty, which is a lot more effective than fear. that is my opinion, however. effectiveness depends on the circumstances... i will have to meet her personally first before i can really give a full and honest opinion, but for now, i will keep a neutral friendly approach until we have communicated a bit then see which way it goes from there..."

"He doesn't seem entirely incompetent as a ruler, but his logic is something that makes no sense. He opposes homosexuality because 'all of the great civilizations who had it fell'. By his logic, all Christian empires eventually fell, so he should oppose Christianity. It's really a logical fallacy that makes no sense. His opposition of communism is somewhat understandable, us humans aren't collectivist by nature. But it's solely to preserve his own position like some sort of egotist. I doubt he's stupid, but he isn't the brightest I've ever seen."

"Friedrich? Oh how wonderful! If there's ever been a true embodiment of the German work ethic, it's this man. It' warms my heart to see him taking so much action following his father's...not that I mean any offence...somewhat 'sedentary' rule. I think his philosophy that dictates perception, asserting a responsible presence, and keeping peaceful order is something that holds a lot of truth, and is something that we as human beings should all be striving to achieve. When it comes down to it though, I think I can recognise, perhaps, a deeper disposition to Fritz that I haven't quite figured out, but nonetheless evokes good. And you know what...that's all that really matters."

--- UPDATED OPINION ---

"So now that i have gotten the opportunity to hear of Oswald's opinion on me, lets just say i am rather disappointed with him. He refuses to accept that even opposites can form good relations. I have formed good friendships with leaders who who support both a mixed and a total capitalist. If he wishes to cling to his political views and judge others by that factor, then I have no interest in him. However, I can assure him that, providing he is a good leader, he would do well to overcome that mentality, lest he start to make enemies with the wrong kind of people... As for his stab at my title and "communism", allow me to educate. I am not entirely communist, as I do believe that all citizens are entitled to their own private housing, which does not follow the communist ideology, where the state owns the housing. there are also a few other factors that follow a more socialist view than communist, but I will leave that for him to find out... I will not rule him out entirely, and will give him a chance to engage in more positive relations with me providing he swallows his pride and gets over the political differences. but until then, I will speak no more of him until he chooses to either be more reasonable, or take stabs at me again. I do not recommend the latter..."

But I'm getting off-topic here - this is meant to be an opinion piece. How do I give those again? Hmm. Politically, she's something like a liberal far-leftist, but since politics are entirely inconsequential in any real, value-related sense, I'll gloss over that. Whatever floats your boat. Or drives your policy-making, I suppose. And yet... what do I comment on here? I see no mention of her stance towards, or actions relating to, scientific progress or anything of the sort. I suppose she's set a decent framework, what with all the universal education and whatnot, but that framework is yet to be elucidated upon. As it stands, I feel as though she's been sidetracked somewhat. All this power, and she uses it to... what, gently enforce the social norms she considers optimal? Fight a god every once in a while? Bah. And what's all this gobbledigook about "religious openness"? Why would something like her bother with religion? I come away from this with more questions than answers, and no clear-cut opinion to give beyond "she has potential". Do you have any idea what a fractally-recursive, universe-wide headache feels like? Void's sake."
