As long as they don't go off the tangent or find out more about me or some lower high-powers below me! Anyway, as for yourself, if you love speed so much, what do you think of going FTL now and then? I cannot grant you that power out of choice, but I can certainly make your dreams come true. Just come visit me one day, and I will propel you faster than a spaceship! Anyway, as for yourself, I guess I am rather positive. Your world is a really, really weird one, I will give it that, but I would not "fix" anything unless it's required. I will see you soon! Or maybe in some distant future, because I am very sure that we will meet each other again! ^^ Take care now, and hey, all the best in everything you do.

I can respect eccentricity but you've gone off the rails a long time ago. I'm not sure what pushed you to choose this path. Were you disillusioned? Were you cursed by someone? Hurt? Abused?

Gah, a part of me wants to admire you. A man with nothing but his madness to accompany him, creating progress out of the ashes of a burning nation. However, just because an action leads to good consequences does not make that action any less reprehensible. You've put me in a bit of a pickle, haven't you?

You're confusing. Everything around you is confusing. You're just...too fast for my liking. You've cultivated this divine image of yourself, thinking you've somehow cracked the code for life but you'll soon find out that your brand of extremism will come biting you in the end. You're human after all and sometimes, even your own creations will outpace you"

"Madame Zorilla. Cute name! Still, I can't base my opinion on cute names but don't worry, you've already made a good impression on me. You know, taking a look at your face, we both know who wears the pants in your household and it's certainly not Charlie, eh? You've proven yourself to an eloquent, fiery politician. Facilitating trade rather than war between with your neighbours is always a plus in my book. 'Steal one's florins rather than their life' is something everyone should go by.

My blood is Turiit and I hold only favour for my brethren; but such blood is not the blood of royalty that befits a ruler. This man demand all his followers venture into battle on his behalf; he cares nothing for their kin or for their purpose or for their prowess. His insecurity is laid naked before our eyes; the hands of his will are also his eyes in his place, and their whips lay cloaked as they watch. It is said that he favours the rule of the crown, but not one fits upon his head, and so I deem him hypocrite in such regards. Another omen that would make the Serpent weep; this one not for contempt alone but pity in equal measure."

It is chalked and raw and bleeding and I have recited the storyteller's tales in my mind time and again and still it not occurs to me what this being is. It ought to be not; as she is, I shall speak of her in knowing ignorance. She is warmaster of her mercenaries; she proclaims herself undying; she wishes to inscribe her name upon the earth by the sword. I trust her not. Her intent seems simple; I suspect all too much is shrouded by a veil of the dark. Her war is unending and I pray it does not come here. Of this much I am certain; all else remains obscure."

"The Dream is unveiled once more; another reviled future that I pray comes not to be. Before I speak of the chalked-women I make now my confession; every passing omen brings my greater doubt; greater despair; I see so little of us and myself within this soul and so much we have deemed wrong; it unsettles me.

Victoria is some manner of demon; a ghoul upon the world; a mosquito-walker. She has endured battle and for this I offer the faintest respect, though she lacks the blood of Djab Wurrung; let alone the blood of kin. I...am ignorant of much of what she encountered. Every day I feel more ignorant of the world of Dreams; of the omens...I digress. She recognised authority in crises; else she values the words of the lesser kin of common blood. This is a sacrilege. But it is not a sacrilege solely her own. On the matter of her I am hesitant to speak; so much remains unknowable and my convictions grow ever more shaken each portent that is revealed to my eyes.

Of Kali I may say even less; I despise her ideals with passion and fire; she would feel the same of my own and my reign. She carries the arrogance of a certain fool; it shadows her and I will not ignore the slight that it is. Even more than Victoria she sees the common good as the arbiter of all. No crown to watch over her, no gods to fast their judgment, no distinctions between blood of the stillborn and firstborn; this is the way she wishes for herself and for her people and it is wrong. No more shall I utter of her methods. There is...too much even now."

"Weak, afraid of war, submissive to his Queen... need I go on? Oh, yes, he is hesitant to gather tribute, that as well. His people like him at least, and I'll credit him for that, but it means little. His devotion to his traditions is admirable, but still foolish. I can prove my faith, he has less ground to stand on. At least he is not the elder-killer. I despise that one."

-Imagine Ari with a disapproving scowl throughout all of this.

It's ~ good ~ day ~ for~ pudding!

"Regarding the Chancellor, my opinion leans somewhat negative."

"While it is true that their views on the economy are generally better than most of their contemporaries who are too set on the capitalist way to understand the exploitation and suffering it causes, their fanatic religiousness combined with assimilationism and isolationism are somewhat concerning. Also of note (and rather unfortunate) is their decision to increase the power of the monarchy in the country. One area that does deserve recognition is their approach to testing and tracking the Covid-19 infection."

Oh! It's warrior-little-sister!

"We have met again, Chieftain Ari. Even I am surprised by this, but as some would say, this is unmei, destiny."

"Again, my opinion on your rule is generally positive, for the conditions you have been raised in. To serve one's people faithfully, to expect and offer loyalty, and to not exploit others nor be exploited....you are indeed ahead of your time in this one, for over the hundreds of years I have lived there are many who have less wisdom than you. Your ability to gather power is also impressive. I expect you to implement more policies for the welfare of your people as you gain more power, and experience. Until our next meeting, then, warrior-little-sister."

"The chancellor seems a kind man but I fear that he has been infected with that great plague known as Nationalism. It is a shame really but I must stick by my principles beyond anything else. Should the chancellor wish to normalize relations with the collective, I would have to decline as that would most likely be the answer of the collectives total will." - Nuha al-Dajani ninja: adding for an

"The chairwoman is a strange creature. Her seemingly inability to die makes her fairly terrifying in the eyes of the workers but I see it as more of a challenge. No man or woman can outlive the sheer power of the revolutionary working class and your time as unopposed dictator of the people will come to an end one day."

(Just added a short biography for Nuha so it should be easier for yall to give an opinion.)
