I hate some repetitiveness but love some others...It seems to really depend how it's done.

Arcade Fire-The Suburbs

Going to go and finish the twisted movie I was watching the other day, but had the stupid laptop go all weird on me again and I gave up finishing it

Arcade Fire-Half Light 2 (No Celebration)

Definitely liking this more than the first time. It kinda started boring me after the first listen, but not so much this time.

Usually it goes the other way. Instead of me liking it more, I go back and go "Meh, boring post-rock" (Just using an example), instead of liking the album more. Though that does happen. Just not usually with albums I thought were kinda boring after a while. Usually I do that with albums that I DO enjoy, but don't entirely know what to think of it until a 2nd listen.

Arcade Fire-Suburban War

Considering the song "The Suburbs" had something about bombs dropping, I don't think this albums lyrically as nice as the album seems like it would be from the music.
