NSG is best for putting one silly comment in the thread, and then leave.

On that note, maybeeee not so much of a cliché yet, just a trope.

Those who spent their time on NSG often tend to lose their nations. I mean sure, other forums and even F7 got it too (remember Kanna and Lymonia? This is my 50th retelling), but there is certainly a lot more DEATs when you are constantly arguing. I tend to limit my reporting nowadays to DOS / Adspammers / broken threads (when some of you botched the BBcodes so hard).

Also I miss the adspammers. I don't want them, but they are definitely better than pornspamming.

Constant WIP is my favourite Cliché because I am the representative of it.

I do seriously want to make a wider 'verse' with hubs for other nations in the same portion of the galaxy, but the Terran Union is the only one I can be bothered to work on so far.

Epic.

I have a single-player storytelling thing that is still ongoing, and I actually do enjoy writing it, there is no doubt about it.

The problem? ... My last post was on June 2020. There is no gravedigging rule (so I can go back to it), but I have not been finishing the next part for nearly a year. Damn.

Whew, I feel like I've been gone a million years! Hopefully in another week or so, I can make more time for writing and RPing here. And then from there I might want to cultivate some better life balance overall, ahahah.

There's a first time to learn for everyone. I've been on the Internet since I was a kid, but posting images was still a learning curve for me when I got into forums as a young adult.

Considering that they'd basically been showing up nearly every goddamn day for at least the past month, yes.

And it's not like it's the only time that some cunt decides to waste their time by spamming this site as 'revenge' or something for getting perm-banned, but usually they get bored after a few of their pathetic 'raids' because they realise that no one gives a shit about them.

And I'm not into modern military stuff in the least, so I usually tune that stuff out.

Of course, I do try to have some realism in my nation, but not in the military sense. Bleh, boring. I'm talking more along the lines of the setting as a whole, and my characters, of course--if they seem like they are real people, I've done my job correctly.

Has it been a minute yet?

I like to think that I am not that crazy towards realism. I mean, nothing wrong with being realistic too, as long as you like what you are doing. 🤔

I just don't think I want to be the one who does the whole "BUT WAIT! IT TURNS OUT..." frequently. Realistic or otherwise, I figure it will throw a lot of people off when you revamp your entire nation or your story on a very frequent basis. It's slightly different from a total retcon. It's like writing and inserting new things into what you have already written, and making the whole thing convoluted. I will try to give an example as best as I can.

Retcon: An entire change of story. I'm not sure how difficult will it be for people (and me) to accept the proposal that Valentine Z now had to be a dictatorial space empire that would make the Covenant wince. Not a big deal for the most parts, you often discard your past writings.

"But wait! It turns out...": It's like me suddenly writing that Clarissa is not a robot, and that she was just faking her, well, robotness - through some rather convoluted process / plot / storywriting that opens more questions than answers, opening several holes into your past writings.

So... in short of my ramblings, don't be too worried about realism if that is your thing. Again, rewrites and retcons are fine, I have no problems against any of that; just make sure that your lore has good foundation to not change that a lot and alienate people who read your stuff.

Different strokes for different folks. I consider having crazy superweapons a slippery slope to powerwanking and having the exact same "nuh uh my gun is bigger" fights as the realism crowd but in a different way. Military realism just gets a bad rap because of the way people try to go about it. I'd love to try to be the person to show that military realism doesn't have to equal spamming jargon and statistics but it's pointless to do an effort post when everyone is one lining.

There's a time and a place for wacky fun, and there's a time and a place for hard realism. There's no reason that you can't do both in different settings.
