Fined $200 for feeding wildlife (unless the alligator's your pet. In that case, no crime.)

Putting someone in one of those white mental torture rooms that make you go insane.

TEXAS - goodbye, everyone :)

That would be the punishment. The crime to get something as severe as that would have to be very severe though, like murdering a non-human citizen for any other reason than self-defense, or spreading dissent.

Speaking about which:

A very simple talking to! Just that the 'talking' comes from the end of a shotgun barrel, and the conversation is right next to a ditch in middle of the jungle. And if children were trafficked, or if it was sex trafficking, or both - then maybe the execution will be via stabbing, bludgeoning, or a combination of both. Fun stuff

Spitting fire? That frequently happens with the little ones, mostly in school. It's not their fault, really. There so much to try to control in school, and sometimes you accidentally set a desk on fire. No big deal, that's why we have sprinkler systems, of course.

Now, if a child set a desk on fire on purpose... maybe detention, and hand them over to their parents to decide how the deal with the situation. Depending upon the damage done, we might ask for money for repairs too.

If an adult spat fire at something... that's a different story. If you can't control fire at that point in your life, that's your fault. Education is free! Learn how to control it! Depending upon the severity of that situation, we'd either fine them or imprisonment. If they genuinely can't control themselves, they go to a training programme to learn how to control it. It all depends on what damage was done and what lives were in danger, if any.
