It doesn't mean, that he is bad or incompetent. Lev knows, what and how he is doing statecraft. It means, that his values are too different from our's and in the way our people don't exactly like because of historical reasons.

"His state and his decadent people are everything we're trying to prevent. A lack of initiative for good takes away the false mask of liberty, and reveals the repulsive truth of anarchy; foul, ridden, every man an individual, and bearded men in the military. I know this myself; my father knew it too, and so did the strife of Weimar. In the days of Bundesrepublik we had a saying to contrast the dark forces of societal anarchy mirrored by Bjornson today: 'Wir kämpfen nicht für Bonzenblut, und nicht für Gold und Geld'. 'We do not fight for thugs, and certainly not for gold or riches.' The implication is that we fight for the folk. I encourage all Skyhookedians interested in seeing a return of law, order, and civil society in their lands to rise up against Bjornson, and to fight against state-enforce thuggery and strife. Arms yourselves and protect your families."

But unlike me who was fortunately born in a prosperous family in a good era, you had struggled so much and did not yield. We both also shifted from legal field to extralegal field -- a dreadful and yet dreadfully necessary function in a society. And what else? We also began our respective reign in such similar manners: a fashionable spring cleaning in the offices, dissolving all oppositions that might block our paths and then making everything look and feel better. I cannot... define this odd connection between us. We have nothing to do with each other, and I hope that we might not, but might I call you... brother mine... in the most ironically manner you will ever heard?
