Jailed for three years in medium security. Probation for the next three years. Compensation to the victim. Public apology on national media. Barred from working in government.

They will have to ask to be forgiven by the victim, and if the victim did not want to forgive them, they will be arrested. If the victim forgive them but they repeat it again, they will be executed

We have almost no crime, but if we do, we put them in prison for about 30 years. the lowest time in prison would be 15 years.

You did read the OP, right? You need to assign a punishment for the above crime, and also state a crime for the BN to assign a punishment for.

If the military were to even get this under control and catch the terrorists alive, considering the intensity of the attack, all perpetrators would very very likely face capital punishment.

Heavily wounding someone in a pistol duel, arranged and agreed to by both parties; the loser accepts his defeat and will not press charges.

Non-Salvarojenses captured while invading an ally would be subject to detention during hostilities according to the laws of war, and generally repatriated pursuant to negotiation or at the conclusion of hostilities—barring prosecutable evidence of war crimes by a given POW.

A Salvarojense who is participating as a hostile combatant against an ally may be committing a number of crimes, depending on individual circumstances. Serving as a foreign mercenary, for instance, would at least see prosecution for unlawful enterprise (maximum 3 years rehabilitative labor) and tax evasion (maximum 3 years of rehabilitative labor and expropriation of undeclared taxable income). Service with any non-Salvarojense military would be treated as at least Renunciation of Duty (maximum 5 years rehabilitative labor, mandatory expulsion from the Gendarmería Nacional with concomitant revocation of firearms rights), if not outright desertion (maximum ten years rehabilitative labor plus expulsion).

The company or individual would be required to pay the due wages + 25% of the wages withheld and be liable to further fine. If they do not comply, the individual would be compensated by the state and the company/individual would face greater financial penalty and potentially forced to sell stocks/shares.
