Extortion is not specifically a crime in Tangatarehua, however there are related offences such as blackmail, harassment and threatening which could all net you a few years in prison.

Faking your qualifications?

Attempted vehicular manslaughter -- 5-10 years hard labor. If the bribe was insufficient, + 5 years hard labor.

If bribe was sufficient, what crime? The officer claims that he was incredibly clumsy that day and he accidentally ran over himself with his cruiser while he was checking its brakes. Yeah, that's it.

Pouring quick dry cement into in your leader's favorite goldfish pond, (or your leader's favored equivalent)?

Depends. Ownership, carry, use, display and possession of firearms is constitutionally protected for free male citizens. This right encompasses all firearms, without any distinction to the type, action or cartridge used in a firearm. In case of female citizens, 2 states does not regulate their ownership by the aforementioned group, while the third (Terra do Eremita) regulates them and requires a permit for possession by the aforementioned group. In most cases, possession without a permit would be a civil infraction, not a criminal offence, resulting in a civil penalty in the form of a fine. Non-citizens who are in the country lawfully may generally possess firearms, albeit states are within their rights to impose restrictions or otherwise regulate firearm possession and ownership by foreigners. As a general rule, firearm possession is strictly illegal only when in possession by someone on parole, non-nationals illegally staying in the Realm's jurisdiction, and certain non-national groups otherwise legally staying in the Realm's jurisdiction. In those cases, the penalty ranges from a fine to up to 25 years in prison and deportation. (in the case of non-nationals)
