"Ah, Liam Navarro. An interesting man, to be certain. I have heard of his exploits, and they are as confounding as they are impressive. While his casual speaking style and tendency to smoke weed make him an odd fit for a leader, they certainly seem to work for him. While he does seem to have something of a more violent streak, I appreciate his dedication to the welfare of his people, along with his dedication to anarchism. I especially appreciate his dedication to rebuilding his culture after certain far-right elements attempted to wipe it out. While our culture still existed in several extant forms, we still had to rediscover it in the process of starting the Midnight Revolution. Overall, while we may disagree on a few fronts, I overall like this 'chill dude'. May Theos richly bless him and his people."

"I don't know exactly how I expected him to look, but I certainly didn't expect him to look relatively normal with a title like Seraph. I'm not complaining, I do think he is quite the attractive man, but it's certainly not the terrifying agent of heaven the name caused me to imagine. He has quite the impressive military resume, taking out even insurgencies with their own style of fighting, which is doubly impressive given how hard insurgencies often are to root out. However, he is a traitor, and I don't like those, though he DID pretty much publicly announce his disdain for his original government, so at least he isn't shadowy, because I hate shadow groups, be they traitors, mafias, or businesses. And a religious leftist, well that certainly is exotic now isn't it. On the whole he is one of the better rulers I've seen.

"Ah, the bird-brain that ideated about killing me? What to say about them? Hmmmm...well, to be honest with you, Elektra, I wish I had more thoughts about you. I even wish I felt angry with you. Saying so little will make me seem like a lazy and cheap replier and I don't like that; but damn am I having a hard time actually trying to express a noteworthy opinion of you. Eh, you're strong and beautiful and all, but that's pretty much it. Your society is based on chimping out to assure dominance, you killed your own kin to be top Silverback, and your warriors can't really do much else other than killing and glorified chest-thumping. You embody that and that's it. Really animalesque if you ask me. I can't blame mentally inferior creatures for acting like that but...eh...I may as well have watched Gorillas in the Mist in all that time. It's on TV right now, but the apes there don't have wings.

I am Valkyrie Valentijn, and I'm telling you - be not afraid. I am not going to hurt you, don't worry about that! Rather, I'm here to make some evaluation about you and I must say though? So far, I am not very sure if I want to agree with your ethos, if any. You seem to be a bit of a cutthroat person, doing whatever you can in order to get up there. Though I don't think that necessitates a death threat so hey, good on you for talking down on that person! Anyway, going back to you - the classic sleigh of hand tricks, eh. Yeah, I'm totally cool with those, and you know, it's quite useful, though do be careful when you think your luck may have ran out. I'm not saying this sarcastically, sometimes it's good to cut your losses too, I'm sure you understand that as a businesswoman. Lissy: Valentijn. Ever since I heard of her, I've been a massive fan. She's everything I admire in a leader.

Hilda: Can we address the stack of elephants in the room? I can't imagine being that big, like, full time. I mean, I know there have been times where we've projected ourselves as utterly massive for romantic strolls in, through, and under the countryside. But this giant lady's got my respect: she doesn't have that option, um, unless she does, but she totally makes it work.

Lissy: And I totally understand the whole 'becoming a bit crazy after receiving a massive influx of power' thing. Take it from one immortal dictator to another, I know it can be a bit weird to get used to. But listen to me talk! You've been at this since long before Hilda and I were even born. Heck, I might be tempted to ask you for advice one of these days! Like, sometimes I have these small crises where I wonder if it's okay to pick a random citizen and shift them in body and mind to a whole different person. No? Just me?

Hilda: I mean, you wouldn't do these things if you didn't know what was best. Like Valentijn here was imprisoned for a few years, but, like, she totally knew that she should reclaim her power. So she did! She knows what she wants and she can get it.

Lissy: And we both agree that her wife's really hot.

"Oh ho ho! I sense insecurity! Though its execution is benevolent in nature, insecurity it remains. So these two came into their apparently awesome capabilities through some inexplicable process involving surpassing amounts of grief, trauma, and despair? That sounds about right. Ultimate power should require ultimate sacrifice. I don't need Vermuth's stories to tell me that. Then subsequently their primary objective is to prevent others from experiencing the same process for themselves? That's where I see it. Insecurity. Sure, keeping folk happy and sated might seem like a beneficent policy, but among our kind we have a word for things that are kept happy and sated: LIVESTOCK. Sheltering people will only lead to more pain down the line, and not the kind that is easily learned from. Let your people struggle. If it means that others develop powers like you, with maybe a grudge on their mind, you might consider that your job wasn't as perfect as you'd like to believe. You're not risking anything, and that's a problem." -Cala Azzakrat Deep Kraken

"A man who aspires to unite the world. But what is a man, if not the sum of his achievements worth the sweat upon his brow? The blood on his hands, used to water the very soil he works? He has managed, barely, to run a country so divided you'd think it was the balkans. Yet under his careful guidance he has strung them together into a formidable force, one beyond the capacities of most modern militaries.

But I digress, even with all that aside he is no better than the common man. Where I'd seek to elevate myself in position and rank, he humbles himself knowing full well that almost anyone else could rip his head off and claim the seat of power. Luckily for him, he isn't hated, though for vastly different reasons unlike myself.

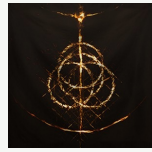

Still, I suppose there has to be some degree of manipulation, some kind of propaganda machine, as I doubt this so-called utopia could possibly exist when we are forced to look at it with rose-tinted glasses."

I dont really like this man, He is ruthless and a liar, someone who shouldnt be trusted under the majority of circumstances. And his nation... "Rapture republic". A nation who lacks Jesus Christ, its no wonder.

I oppose the majority of what he is for, and honestly think his death is going to be the reason a Second civil war starts in the nation he currently rules..

So I will give this man a 5.6/10

Hilda: The Hamlet pose in his portrait seems...symbolic.

Lissy: The what? Ah, of course...I never really got into Shakespeare. And, well, not to be rude, but General Achaedus doesn't seem like the kinda person to read Shakespeare.

Hilda: Cuz he's freakin' ILLITERATE! That's the greatest thing I've ever heard! This guy, in charge of a country? ...Ow.

Lissy: Not the time or the place, dummy! This guy's been through a lot. I feel like he desperately needs a girlfriend. Or a boyfriend. Or anything in between! Genuinely. For all intents and purposes, he doesn't seem like he's done a bad job. But...PTSD is...well, it's horrible. We would know.

Hilda: Dude needs to learn to step away from the past. You know what? Working on something seems to help. Taking up a study...learning to read and write, perhaps? Seriously dude.

Lissy: He's disabled, Hilda!

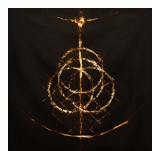

Hilda: Sheesh. Fine, I'll back off. I guess my advice to the General is something I had trouble with for a hot minute. Listen up, it's important! Love yourself, dude. Or find someone who forces you to. Life ain't much without it.

"These two, they both seem rather interesting, I always thought Hilda was a guy in the beginning.

But don't take offense, you're a great looking woman. But I just didn't know your names yet! And you are the rougher one of your crystal kind.

I wish to test that strength regardless, perhaps I will have more to say about you in future interactions but as we speak I have little understanding.

As for Lissy, she seems sweet. She holds the power over her kind, seems open minded and generally she's always cheerful which I find refreshing in a leader. It isn't always the best, but in her case I think it is alright. I'm very curious of the two though."-Luden Hilda: The Harlet pose in his portrait seems..symbolic.

Lissy: The what? Ah, of course..I never really got into Shakespeare. And, well, not to be rude, but General Achaedus doesn't seem like the kinda person to read Shakespeare.

Hilda: Cuz he's freakin' ILLITERATE! That's the greatest thing I've ever heard! This guy, in charge of a country? ..Ow.

Lissy: Not the time or the place, dummy! This guy's been through a lot. I feel like he desperately needs a girlfriend. Or a boyfriend. Or anything in between! Genuinely. For all intents and purposes, he doesn't seem like he's done a bad job. But..PTSD is..well, it's horrible. We would know.

Hilda: Dude needs to learn to step away from the past. You know what? Working on something seems to help. Taking up a study..learning to read and write, perhaps? Seriously dude.

Lissy: He's disabled, Hilda!

Hilda: Sheesh. Fine, I'll back off. I guess my advice to the General is something I had trouble with for a hot minute. Listen up, it's important! Love yourself, dude. Or find someone who forces you to. Life ain't much without it.

"Though I am precluded from finding meaning in the written word, I am quite well-versed in Shakespeare and other 'classic' works. I could recite them to you, if you would like. Which language would you prefer I use when doing so?" - Achaedus OOC: also it's amusing, you're the second poster that says Achaedus needs a hug.

"Westmoreland is a complicated man, to be sure. At first, I was ready to write him off as your average wannabe Orsea- sorry, white dictator in a nation that doesn't belong to him. But then... the picture got cloudier.

For starters, the Nazis were there long before him, terrorizing Africa in ways that even France would blush at. I suppose that's what one should expect when the people holding dominion over you think of themselves as some sort of superior stock. But I suppose the Nazis won the Second World War here, and thus held their iron grip over the territory until the OFN came in and installed their own government... a military junta, of course, because I suppose Americans and Europeans don't know how to create transitional governments in any other way.

Regardless, Westmoreland was put at the head, and considering the position he's in, he's not as bad as I would have suspected. He respects the people he governs and simply wants to give them the tools to get themselves on their feet once his government is done. He's done a commendable job fighting off the fascist guerillas that have been continuing to terrorize his populace, putting them down like the inhuman monsters they are. As opposed to running it like a junta, he's been running his state like a social democracy... and that's where the troubles begin. In spite of everything, he's still a liberal. Even though it's clearly not his intent, he's still acting as an arm of economic imperialism for the coalition of nations he represents. He doesn't have the revolutionary politics required to truly seek liberation and autonomy for the people he's been charged with. I believe that this will end up being his downfall.

Still, in spite of all of that, I can imagine the people of Central Africa in worse situations. They could be still under the control of the Nazis, who think of them as lesser beings meant to be extinguished. Or they could have had their borders redrawn in horrendous ways once their former colonizers retreated their governing arms, their forced conflict being used to fuel horrific new forms of economic imperialism. Though he might be a liberal and a possible inroad for future imperialism, Westmoreland is at least a well-intentioned man who seeks equality and justice for the people he's been thrust into this situation with, and that is more than I can say for any of the, er... 'acceptable' alternatives to those in power."

"Nowadays in these dire times full of execrable bourgeois imperialists and fascists slithering around it is rare to find someone whose demeanor is as beautiful as her heart, soul and position! Kiusareik Grimhild Roz, of the People's Democracy of the Red Lake (Ryifykyerwi) is one of the rare exceptions, a beautiful woman, of long, brunette and well-kept hair, and a comely and cute face whose touch is as beautiful as her side to the proletariat, and a vanguard of nicety in these troubled times!

Despite not knowing any revolutionary theory or lacking any revolutionary praxis, Kiusareik Grimhold Roz has a proletarian instinct in all things, and had she never come across Marxism would be judged as 100% correct by any Feyris catgirl! A vanguard of anti-imperialism who opposed the bourgeoisie in the pristine forests and the beautiful lake of Ryifykyerwi (Red Lake), and a defender of a strong progressive nationalist position! She knows the damage of imperialism to the environment as one of the main antagonistic contradictions, and had always boldly and bravely endeavored to defend it like a Faerie of the Forest!

Kristelle Yohanne Aenschein's teachings on religion had been vindicated in the People's Democracy of Ryifikyverwi (Red Lake) when Druidism, that old and ancient lore, the begotten traditions of the forefathers, the magic of the Druidesses has been harnessed by the people of Ryifikyverwi, standing strong with their beautiful vanguard of a lady Grimhold Roz as a bulwark against imperialism! The Druidess of Ryifikyverwi is our progressive ally against imperialism!

I also find pleasant surprise and comfort in how the traditions of Ryifikyverwi are so alike with our Native Homeland Feyrisshire. The prominence of the Ryifikyverwi (Red Lake) is an uncanny mirror to the ancient and fabled heritage that we hold in Daschime (Yewon) (Daschime Lake), the cradle of Feyrisshire. The Druidic Traditions of Ryifikyverwi (Red Lake) is so similar to Ryeifinisml And finally, the progressive and strong attitude, as well as the magical beauty of Grimhold Roz, so alike to our fabled and respected pre-Marxist leaders of the past, such as Princess Ryeishby, Princess Mei, Princess Chrysanthemum or Princess Shale Mei Nyan!

I only get cheerful, good and nice things, as well as progressive positions from you Comrade Kusakarik Grimhold Roz, that a Feyris Catgirl might stare into your soul and heart and see not only a faint of shimmer from the Faerie-Goddess of the Forests and the Woods Shiyara, but a Feyris Faerie's heart within your soul!

"The word communism leaves a bad taste in my mouth. I've heard so many causes of chaos champion it, spreading anarchy in a bid for delusional equality and promoting self-destruction along the way. I'm honestly pleasantly surprised with that in mind, to see what the High Princess truly believes in. Now I'm not sure if the sentiment is mutual. She might accuse me of fascism. I don't think that's true. Kyoki Chudoku prides itself on unity of all its citizens, not the repression of the undeserving. Now the deserving are repressed, yes, but that's because they're guilty of treason. I'm sure we can both agree that penal labour does wonders to make use out of people who would otherwise spread disorder and dissent.

What baffles me is that she finds democracy acceptable. ...why? Just why? Does she still believe that harnessing chaos in such a way is possible? Has she been taken in by the lies of supposed liberty? That is something I find hard to look past. But then, in times like these, I find myself more and more desperate for answers to many impossible questions. Maybe I've held similar delusions in the past, if less reprehensible ones. Goodness knows one other self decided to become a deity...but that's off topic.

Culturally, she sounds like Gikochinai and I'm not sure how to handle it. She likes her games and virtual idols and we have plenty of that sort of thing, but all for the purpose of media warfare and promoting our country. Maybe Gikochinai herself sees more in it, she's always been...artistic...anyway. The point is, she sounds like someone I can relate to in a way, without being anything like her. Maybe in the past. Long in the past...

Look, I'll be honest. I can't tell if we'd get along or hate each other. I respect her commitment to tyranny and oppression, and I'm not fond of her leniency towards democracy for some insane reason. I'm not one for making friends at the best of, I'll put it that way. But as architects of tyranny? Maybe we have that much going for us, depending on how she sees it. Maybe..."
