That reminds me that there is no mixed-economy policy. Its either capitalism, or socialism, not lets say.... corporatism, or market-socialism, or something.

Imagine having already developed your nation's canonical economy.

Maybe I'm just looking in all the wrong places but that's all I see on unironic NS state policies.
May be because low selection of policies have increased patterns or maybe because it's just how the userbase is here, I can't tell. Either way defiantly a cliché or a over used trope at the least.

i intentionally sook those out because of the whole "the government will not legislate morality because it has better things to do than driving out to the middle of the woods to punish someone who has literally nothing for doing something that harms nobody" thing laughs in 100% service rate and an army equipped with pointy sticks tbh that's not limited to just one-line rp. it's possible to go "ohoho look how much i know about military tech imma flex how much i can minmax my army to the point of unbeatability" too, and it's got much of the same effect.
