"Dance Of Pales" also by Michru Yamane. It's not as happy as the previous song named, but it's just as good, only in other ways.

"Wood Carving Partita" by Michiru Yamane. Sounds like what I'd imagine 18th century ballroom music to sound like.

I can't get over that.

One of my favorite parts of the song. To be honest, whenever I listen to it, I think of flying ninja whales attacking pirates and whaling ships.

If I could paint well, I'd paint a scene of that.

"Crystal Teardrops" by Michiru Yamane. I've yet to find an underground tunnel system theme this cool.

"Dance Of Illusions" by, yes, Michiru Yamane. A lot more powerful than any soundtrack I've named prior.

Secret Chiefs 3-Sophia's Theme

From the 30-track album of theirs that is set up to be like a soundtrack, with lots of really short songs. The longest song on the album is 3:18

Secret Chiefs 3-Zombievision

This is the song I'll be listening to if a zombie apocalypse ever starts. I should play a zombie game to this.

I'm being nice to you all and not spamming this every 1 minute or every 2 minutes with a new song, when a song goes by.

I've scarcely heard songs like that. It's really interesting.

"Tragic Prince" by Michiru Yamane. It appears that fixing clocks is much more intense than previously expected.

Oh, you can do that? ^_^ I thought there would be a rule in place that'd state something like "no posting on this thread for the next ten minutes/posts prior to your own last post".

The band is a very unique band, and they do have some pretty weird music. Their music varies greatly, too, from electronic music, to death metal (Like, 2 songs), middle eastern, surf rock, soundtrack, western, ect.

What's your opinion on this one? This is one of my favorites of theirs.

Loved it. Every thirty seconds that passed by, and the scene I picture with the song changed dramatically.

I've posted up to 5 songs in a row (mostly like, when I'm listening to songs that are between 4 and 7 minutes long, not 1 and 2. And probably more then 5 as well), and nobody seems to complain. This is a thread where you can get away with triple posting, and beyond.

I only do that when I'm listening to music and it is quiet, though.

I thank you for the ones you already posted. But, now that I have their name, I can begin the search for the rest, on single-player. ☐

I don't know much about your taste, so I don't know if you'll like all of them, but I think you'll like a lot of their stuff.

If you have Spotify, most of their stuff is on there.

I've managed to get used to that okay. It needs to be done in a more interesting way, though. Just screeching for the sake of screeching with no real substance doesn't do much for me.

Secret Chiefs 3-Halloween

I hope they play this song live when I go and see them this Wednesday, but I don't remember what "Satellite" bands are supposed to play when I go. The band consists of 7 different sub bands, in a way, but they are all still masterminded by the genius that is Trey Spruence.

Different version, because they are one of those bands who actually tweak their own songs around. Though, I think this is a cover of a song. They do a lot of strange covers.....Like the U.S. military march. And some Afghani national anthem or something. And old horror movie soundtrack songs.
