I keep thinking about how much I want to own that album. That's how good it is.

It isn't my favorite album, but I'd probably give it an 8 at least and I'd probably consider it one of, if not my favorite 'easy' listen album, if that makes sense, even though I was going on about how I needed to get used to the vocals at first when I first listened to it

As in, if I want something to just chill to while driving that isn't ambient stuff, THAT is the album I'd go to.

Same reason I pondered getting Of Monsters and Men album and Lorde's, but Fever Ray's album is superior then both of those.

Now The Knife (By the same person but with her original duo band) isn't as easy as a listen I'd say, but I'd rate it higher than Fever Ray. Their new album, that is. It is weird that I'd consider Shaking the Habitual one of my favorite albums ever but I'd probably listen to the Fever Ray album more often...

Maybe.

I have no idea if I made any sense.

The Knife is definitely harder to listen to...don't know why though, just not my style I guess. Fever Ray is something I can listen to just to have some pleasant music playing, whereas with The Knife there are certain sounds in their music that annoy me.
It's weird though because it's the same person, just with a different band.

I understand completely though. Fever Ray is more about a relaxing electronic pop music (Even the mellowest songs I'd classify as being pop-ish), and is meant to be a more listenable experience I'd say, even with the weird deep singing and whatnot.

The Knife on the other hand is all about throwing out the weirdest and most bizarre pop songs imaginable

Stupid lyrics but that's the nature of trap music...still 1,000,000x better than Chief Keef.
Actually, the lyrics are great for being trap music.
