It's when the singer can't sing, that I get pissed. Auto-tuners should be banned. They allow low-grade "vocalists" near the mic. They have no talent. Not to mention that they all sound the same.

There is good pop out there, I'm sure of it.

I just avoid it all, whether it's radio pop or fake, plastic sounding metal. Corporate music tends to be pabulum without any substance.

On topic, Burzum - Han Som Reiste.

Ah wait, now listening to "Destroy 2000 Years of Culture!" by Atari Teenage Riot, nothing quite like some violent, anti-establishment, bass heavy tunes

Last I checked Escape the Fate was metal/hardcore.

And if you mean pop, as in POPULAR, well, not as popular as some. For which I am glad.

Some pop is good, and I am willing to listen to Eminem, but I have a problem when I have some bologna heads (my cousin, her friends, and some people who think they're my friend) trying to push it down my throat.

It's pop. It follows pop song structures and sounds like pop, just with aggressive guitars. It's definitely not hardcore, it's not any type of metal, it's similar to metalcore, but watered down until it only vaguely resembles it. It's as much metalcore as Sum 41 is punk. Not hating, just saying...
