Legal. Even encouraged. You may even get a medal.

SWATing someone you don't like for no reason (in other words, making a false call to the police department and causing the SWAT team to raid the person's house).

Well, if they die, that's just murder, which'll give you life in jail, most likely.

If they don't it's probably attempted murder... Which'll probably net you 5-10 years in jail, depending on the circumstances.

The worker is probably entitled to civil compensation, and there are many attorneys willing to take such a case on a "no bill until you win" basis. (Some will even take it pro-bono.)

Ninja'd.

AAN:

The dismissal would be invalid and if the employee didn't want his job back, the employer would have to pay a high compensation. Suvh a thing doesn't really happen often, though. Men and women are totally equal here and the people that could be discriminated for their religion would never have been let into the country in the first place.
