It basically is a space empire which is the direct result of European cooperation, with European Commonwealth sending ships of 200,000 people out during the late 20th century into an unstable wormhole.

When it comes to the legal aspects of sexuality and gender, they are light-years ahead of England IRL.

Well, from what I've gathered, hostilities between the Spanish and English seemed to last all the way into the late 19th century. A vast divergence from our current timeline. The last time the Spanish opposed Britain in an armed conflict was the Anglo-Spanish war of 1796-1808, unless you include volunteers, so it seems like bad blood between the British and Spanish runs rather deep in your lore. I wonder how the British and Spanish view the French.

A Future-Tech civilisation that survived the destruction of its now long-gone homeworld and is attempting to consolidate its place in the stars, all the while avoiding getting its ass kicked around.

Honestly, I haven't read their factbooks in a while, but going off what I can scrape off as of now, the inception of Bloodshade was due to a big monkey moment occurring in their homeworld, which would eventually become known as the "War of the Woes", basically it can be summed up as one big fucking shitflinging competition that ended up breaking the planet, though thankfully, some who hadn't succumbed to monkey status managed to send out a migrant

There is a unit in the US Army where the personnel are armed with repeating laser rifle, laser-rangefinders and laser-machinegun equipped Crusader tanks, and also laser destroyers and- you get the idea. Basically they are an all-Laser unit that has a naval component, including a "Battlecruiser-Carrier" (that I genuinely thought was a ship that carried battlecruisers until right now)

The Sevkacheli, a major minority in the northern rainforests and wetlands of Murazgora, are a creative and social people who seem more closely tied to nature, as they prefer to make their houses out of wood rather than metal- as encouraged by the majority culture group- and also are interested in various plants. In addition, they're one of the few non-Murazy cultures, with most of the other cultures in the country being either within the cultural group or else being a natural syncretization of another culture towards that cultural group.

Their national television network consists of 3 public channels: a general channel, a movie channel and a sports channel. From the looks of it, channel managers are fond of western pop-culture. I wonder whether the ordinary viewers share the appreciation. And a quick note about news at 21:00 — looks like a part of post-Soviet heritage. I mean, there was a major news program at 9 pm in the USSR back then (and, in fact, it's still there in Russia.)

US, Canada, obscure sci-fi plus weird sports = this.

Much like works of fiction there existed patent laws for inventors and/or their descendants that reserved the right of producing their inventions to them alone for +20 years. Because of this, the Open Copyright Convention (or OCC) was made up, ensuring the free sharing of all technologies as long as they're not applied for profit.

They've got a number of PBCs, each of which seems to specialize in particular brands of entertainment such as sports, infotainment/general entertainment, and whatever it is that Second Cinema Channel does.

So from their only non-WIP factbook. it seems that they're located somewhere in Anatolia. Is this a Crusade remnant? The overview factbook says I'm wrong. It's apparently been occupied by someone else since 700 BCE, so that's tough going for them.

It seems as though quite a substantial portion of the housing market is claimed by the public housing board, at about 42 percent, of which most of the associated residents are subscribed to subsidised rental schemes. Neat!

The President of the United States, who's a general in the army rather than its civilian Commander-in-Chief because why not, controls one personal military unit. Granted, that unit basically has a naval (and presumably aerial) component and also may or may not be the most powerful military unit on the face of the planet given its tech leve.

Allegedly, Grand Marshal Magnus was first fascinated by fleets of (space)ships while he was a mere child, at a school fieldtrip, and it was allegedly this interest that led him to want to join the Interstellar Navy.
