Nice. I've organized my room multiple times before, but this time it is a THOROUGH reorganizing, not a "Oh, here's papers and old magazines, GO INTO THIS DRAWER AND WEIGH THE PLASTIC DRAWER SO MUCH IT BREAKS ONE OF THE WHEELS OFF THAT I THEN HALF HEARTEDLY FIXED", no, this is a "Get rid of a bunch of crap you really don't need to pointlessly hang onto, donate stuff, put clothes that are too small into the too small box, even if they sorta fit you still, actually organize the stuff you DO keep, and so on". Sure, I'm keeping a lot of stuff still, but it is progress.

Instead of doing a New Years Resolution thing that I almost always fail at anyway, I'm doing a "Weekly Project" sort of thing this year. And my room is this weeks project. Not only does it actually make me work more, in the end, I'll accomplish more then if I did a New Years Resolution.

of course New Years Resolutions are bigger (Finish (and start) GED , get in shape again, ect), but this is still bigger in the long run. And even though I'm not officially making them a New Years Resolution, those are still on my mind for this year. And the funny thing is I'll probably accomplish more having it set this way anyway.

2014 was my set year of "Do NOT give yourself a long break anymore. Time to get serious with life", and so far, I'm managing to do a good mix of both. And this week, I've already done something that wasn't even on my "Project of the Week" list.

Nice man, keep at it!

I'm quite leased with how my room's turned out as well. Course I might still move some stuff around, but I can finally see myself using my desk for homework and stuff!

No matter what though, I'll have stuff lying around in my room and closet (My closet was so shoved full of crap I couldn't even shut it properly), because I can't ever get rid of my Lego's, my Linkin Logs, my Dominoes, blocks, ect. They're all building toys I still can enjoy. So they need to go somewhere....

It will probably be able to fit in the closet better when I'm done.

The only desk I have is apparently a desk we got from a dumpster or something YEARS ago and it is still being used for my computer...I expect one of these days for it to break on me.

At least it doesn't have one of those old-fashioned, heavy ass monitors on it anymore that was bending it..

Yeah, it is fun living in a house that hasn't had much money in a long time but we used to get quite a bit of stuff...

Oh, and this house we live in seems to lack storage space (except a huge garage, which is as big as a disaster as my closet on a bigger scale. Another project at some point), so we have stuff all over. Especially now that a bunch of boxes of books came in at one point.

I could ramble on about pointless things but eh.
