My longest factbook is, currently, 17125 words long. And it's a legit factbook too, not just memes.

I need a new hobby.

Holy shit it did crash WordCounter.net.

Atleast it worked when I refreshed the site. Funny because I can put 14k word long essays in and it'll be completely fine (though the reason for the crash was probably it trying to count how many times 'boop' was written). What a fantastic keyword density of 10,010.

yeah, it's fine with longer factbooks, so it has to be the repetition of the word.

It's the Vassal Factbooks in Wexas, and I think part of the reason why it's so long is because each section introduces both a region and character. The sections themselves are only around 3,000-ish words each, and honestly, I feel like I could have written more, but I didn't feel like writing an entire overview factbook for the town of Rockport.

I thought it might've been that one. character writing is a really easy way to end up spamming thousands of words in one factbook, I've found.

Now that we're venting off on PT consternation, or Hamatu was, I'll have to say that "God Pantheons" are a bit of a pet peeve of mine, not because I don't like them but because they overshadow other forms or interpretations of polytheism...or pantheism...like the messed-up system I use, based off of Nahua beliefs, or a segment of scholarly interpretations over the beliefs of their warrior-class.

I admit that it's unfair to get mad at people for soaking up pop culture's depictions of Greco-Roman or Norse or Egyptian pantheons, and how they're all relatively neatly divided into their own little domains and have a fairly human face to them, are considered "supernatural", etc.

And it gets weird...

So, your factbooks might have the same length of a novel, but does it have an epic map where you get to see which places the nukes hit during WW3.
