In your opinion, can be considered cliché the newbies who look at the threads of embassies, questionnaires, shops of various companies, with their beautiful graphics and well-articulated pages, and say "I want to do it too!"; then they come up with an empty thread with barely a few words like "Here we do things" and then the form to fill out.

People finding this website for the first time are typically in their teens. Probably still feel edgy. Since slavery is edgy, they do it.

Also, evil is fun, and since slavery is one of humankind's greatest evils, they institute it.

Is this a cliché: All of the other nations in my little alternate universe including my own just resorted to isolationism after an event corresponding to WW2 and that explains how the world has achieved semi-world peace.

Though I'm thinking of reworking it to where conflicts do happen albeit less often or a lot smaller.

New players making slavery threads to show how 'evil' and 'edgy' their nations are is the modern equivalent of new players making their nations thinly-veiled Nazi nations/literally just AU Nazi Germany.

It's the lamest way to be evil, so it makes sense.

You could create a (possibly vaguely racist) nation that practices chaotic human sacrifices to appease a God-King, but that requires actual research (or, god forbid, they'd have to play as a nation that isn't populated by WASPs), so just enslave people instead.

I'm just glad most of them don't make that final bridge to racial chattel slavery, because that would be even more deeply uncomfortable... instead, they use an ill-defined slavery of... idk some people i guess

That's the thing, though, a lot of them I've seen just kinda... have slaves, and don't elaborate on how or where the slaves are coming from. It's super weird.

A few clichés that have probably been covered already, but are still funny to mention:

- Random forum threads "looking for a wife for my leader" or "does anyone wanna buy some slaves??"
- Third Reich weeb nations
- USSR-themed noob nations
- Nations with an anime character pasted over a normal looking flag
- Anti-CCD hate
- All the 12-14 year old RPer who begin to flood the feeders around this time of year
- Anonymous moderators being so chill and smooth
- Ultra serious forum users/players who have been on since 2003
- Lily ads

This is also why summies with one-liner or one-word responses are frowned upon deeply. People want to show off their work and see what people think. The people who only look at their name, sig, flag and maybe their main nation page go against that in the lowest effort way possible that tells the person being responded to that this person doesn't care enough to read their work.

That's also why people can be...hostile. Or defensive.
