That's an East German documentary on the man, Muller himself, who is real btw. It has subtitles and that's how I got to study the man's personality even further.

Anyways, judge the policies, not the man. Well, his policies remind me of Edwin Hudson's as well as the general Art Deco aesthetic. The only difference seems to be his 'nationalism', though that seems to more about economic pragmatism and expanding the interests the nationstate over regions. Basically, the kind of nationalism associated with capitalism's rise. Though, he did create something not too dissimilar to Social Security, and he is from the early 20th century in his world.

Honestly, not too keen on spreading socialism to his world unless I'm too bored. But, I would hate his guts naturally if we shared the same nation together.

Still, I find it funny that he wants to spend a ton of money on the army and NOT use it. But then again, the RCAS kind of does the same thing with its war industry, though we do have a record of getting stuck into various wars during the 22nd century despite our general non-interventionist policy."

It's time to live free and dangerously in Puerto Soleil as Konrad rode on his Porsche whom he hijacked from a socialite as he cruised down the streets, damning anybody who stood his way. With gold cubans on his chest and soul music blaring from his radio; he simply spread pamphlets all over the street. Bystanders grabbed it and were met with this passage "Let a hundred flowers bloom; let a hundred schools of thought contend" as the criticism campaign continues.

"I could not in good faith call him a comrade of mine. Sincerely fuck him and his ilk; opportunist lacking in class consciousness and human vitality, he is a cuck. One does not ban cars or aeroplanes for we Futurists look up to them as true beauty of modern human technology and potential. And what is this compulsory veganism nonsense? Is it not self-evident that we humans are the true overlord of this blue Earth? Can animals really feel pain or should I demonstrate it to you?"

The Statement on Hartmann

"Khm, there's a version of Germany which hasn't lost its lands in Poland, has Austria, and still possesses overseas territories? Someone call the Yazov with Omsk shovel gang, there is someone in need of a Second Great Trial. Unfunny references aside, Hartmann seems like someone who has been molded by the political scene and has been in it for a long time."

"Him being born in a middle class family, huh - not surprising at all. It is where a lot of politicians have come from, despite the stories of "from the bottom to the top" which people eat up. He wanted to fight in the army at 15, but got rejected? Well, didn't his parents indeed raise a patriot, hehe. That said, it seems that his family life isn't the best, and he hasn't mended the rift, but at least he still could bounce back and succeed - if something like that would have happened there, it would be a lot harder as our families hold together for a reason."

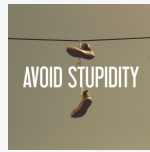

"Him being to the point seems to have contributed to his rise in politics, and he is indeed right on the small business owners being one of the most vulnerable members of society. However, his concerns about conservatives is something we had a bit of a chuckle about. Anyways, putting back politics to serve your country seems something like a patriot would do, indeed. Him beating a trade union member who was twice his age and more experienced some would consider a tragedy, others a feat, while we simply note it as a turning point in his life. Well, it seems that the combination of aggressive political ads in billboards, internet, and other places did indeed pay off, huh? At least your party has a good PR."

"At last, his views. The containment of multinationals and large companies is something we approve of, but albeit it is pragmatic, the wording of his economic policy makes it sound that there is still a mix of Germanic arrogance in it. His social libertarianism is unfortunate, but so are all forms of it. The opposition of both communism and fascism gives some heavy "enlightened centrist" vibes, and not in a good way. At least he is a militarist, opposes the nuisance of some particular westerners, and doesn't bend to foreign powers too much, but he also sounds a lot like someone who would support colonialism if it would somehow happen again. About his opposition to big government and privatization, the cringe of some Americans comes to mind."

Our Parliament may be comprised of incompetent sophomores, but at least its members are identifiable...let's see...I don't really know anything about Uzbekistan, so forming opinion on their hostility toward the Uzbeks seems unwise...how does the Directorate feel about...no, that is irrelevant.
