That in their world, they are a member of the "Big 5", the most powerful and influential nations on the planet. Alongside the British Commonwealth, the United States of America, the Russian Tsardom, and the Empire of Japan, the North German Confederation possesses a large stockpile of weapons of mass destruction, which qualifies them for inclusion within the Big 5.

It is bordered by the Netherlands to the northeast, Swabia, Switzerland, and Westphalia to the east, Lombardy and Tuscany to the southeast, Castile to the west, and Andalusia to the southwest. Despite having a hereditary monarchy that values blood purity, incest is not practiced within the royal family, as their religion strictly forbids it. According to the Holy Book of Suniezren, it disgraces both their ancestors and their successors, and is functionally equivalent to blood impurity.

In addition to controlling British Colombia, and Alaska in the North American Continent, their continuous possessions in Eurasia spans from the Pacific to Brandenburg in Germany and from Baluchistan to parts of Finland... which makes you think how in the name of fuck did everyone just let it happen.

They have a constitution, a president and an emperor (which it isn't entirely clear if they are separate or the same person; might just be my own reading), a chancellor, Reichstag, and Bundesrat.

The Office of the President of the Federation (Bundespräsidium) belongs to the Emperor. Constitutionally, he is both the "President of the Federation" and "Emperor", More on that later 🤔

Human sacrifice continues to be practised in Caligolus. In Vaderfell, hundreds of sorcerers are sacrificed every year to power a magical wall to enforce a quarantine, which is not to be confused with Wardenfell and its Ghostfence.

In their timeline, Catharism became a strong force in Europe, which translates into Occitania overtaking France as the dominant Western European power (also, their Prime Minister bears a strong resemblance to Victoria Justice).

Well, you found the inspiration behind it, and I could be accused of not being great at naming things, (though TBF, Wardenfell was actually not the inspiration behind Vaderfell's name, Star Wars actually was... ^^;), but I do in fact go beyond what the inspiration did, which at the end of the day is the most important thing. Ghostfence wasn't powered by actively killing people, up to and including babies, it was powered by self sacrifice, and people agreeing to be a part of it. Ghostfence also didn't have a mind of its own, as far as anyone knew, nor did ever attack anybody that got too close. I'm pretty sure it also did not block teleportation to and from that which it enclosed, have secret tunnels dug underneath it to circumvent it, nor did it ever become a DMZ between enemy forces. At the end of the day, what I have done is taken inspiration, used a trope, and played with the idea, none of which are bad things. I'll still admit I'm not great with naming stuff though.

You could ask, I suppose, why I didn't list all of that in the factbook. And it wouldn't be a bad question. My answer would be, however, that this wasn't really the point of that factbook, that factbook existed to list NS policies that are canon for the Holy Empire and various countries and colonies within it, how those policies work, and notable examples of those policies in action, not to go terribly in depth. It's a fast reference with quick blurbs, adding too much detail there would actually hinder its usefulness.

One of Hatsunia's most celebrated public holidays is Miku Day on March 9th, celebrated as such because the numbers 3 and 9 in Hatsunese can be pronounced as mi and ku respectively. There are 20 officially recognised public holidays in total, and under the Happy Monday System implemented in 1970, a number of these holidays were made to always occur on a Monday in order to create extended weekends every year.
