If you violate copyright, there will be financial, monetary and, depending on the severity, even criminal consequences.

If it does not violate any copyright law, it will be ignored by the state justice, leaving the private sphere to resolve the case internally.

Fraud crime. Be a swindler.

For example, having a social project to feed homeless people, collect financial or food resources, but the project does not actually exist and the person who would be behind the social project is keeping all the resources for himself.

Crime of Obscene Act.

The crime consists of the practice of obscenity in a public place, either open or exposed to the public. The penalty is detention, from 3 months to 1 year.

Did he kill that man? If so, a penalty for murder would be imposed. The penalty applicable for the crime of murder is the death penalty.

If he wasn't responsible for the murder, a penalty would be imposed for vilifying a corpse. The penalty applicable for the crime of vilifying a corpse or its ashes is detention, from 1 to 3 years.

I'm not entirely sure of what you mean. Do you mean *literally* impersonating another country's soldiers? Or do you mean stolen valor but for a foreign nation's military? Or do you mean espionage? I can't quite tell. Either way, execution by military tribunal.

In order for a personal brewery business to be considered "illegal" you would have to knowingly be putting something in the product that would harm people. However, bribery of a public official will get you sent to a forced labor camp for 5 years minimum, plus a sizable fine with extended time depending on how many people were probably harmed by your product. As for the police chief? Executed. Police corruption is no small mater in Holy Catheria.
