Seeing how it is a slow day in the forums, the High Inspector finally shows up from his dark corner where he normally works, as he is usually not capable of posting before another user posts. He is seated at his desk, with his laptop in front of him, inspecting the reports on... things. I mean, he is literally called the High 'Inspector'. It is his job to inspect, yes.

"How does it feel to live through an eternity, trying to solve the Gordian knot that is human affairs? Fate... after all, it all comes down to a fact that even deities have given up on taking control of humanity, whether for the sake of free will or due to sheer chaos that humans create for themselves. Existential dread... I know that too well, but not as well as you do. Providence has given me a fair insight, but not all of it. He knows the weight of that dread will be too paramount for any human. I can also see that your experiences and revelations of existence, time and space have so prevented you from misusing your powers. Well, the better we are off in this scenario."

"Well, I will likely explain Providence to you and you to him later. I have not written the factbook yet, apologies. But you might have known him as an age-old admirer of yours. Yes, him... the Black Providence. He has returned, his knowledge prevailed on our Earth, and even Fate will not be able to control us. Still, I apologize if I am sounding too much like a cultist and too little like an ordinary political figure. Heh..."

Then again, she is an ancient creature in human skin, back when she was still forming her worldview the invasion of England by the Franks was still an open wound. Everything I see about her makes me think she's frozen in a state of being perpetually 17. All in all, no approval from me. I don't appreciate someone who does more posturing than action, but her form of action makes me wish for the posturing instead."

"Often, revolutionaries apply theories dogmatically, and forget the limits of the society they are operating in. Other times, the party cadres are so focused on waiting for the right time to act that they compromise too frequently, or in too great amounts, and lose sight of what they set out to accomplish. Both of those cases are harmful to the ultimate goal of realizing our revolutionary goals, for they weaken the momentum of the people's movement, rendering it either vulnerable to counter-revolutionary forces from the right or removing it's revolutionary component entirely. Fortunately, the leader of Ankras appears to be neither of those. They are pragmatic, yet understanding that certain values cannot be discarded, and their work on unifying the people of the party and pushing forward their own policy is remarkable. Furthermore, their support of the people's democracy, welfare of the people, and liberation of all corners of previously unprivileged society is a remarkable conclusion for

She has proven herself wise beyond even her long years, and a credit to the society that has birthed her, even if I do not wholly approve of that society's way of life. I do not necessarily pledge myself to her, even if I would consider her a trusted adviser, but nonetheless I am eager to come before her with my ills, if need be - and I have many ills to bring before her, if she will take them. Listen, here, bucko. I know you have your little "shtick" of being Against Leviathan. And that's all well and good - I'm not going to complain about some rich ancient zigurats getting their treasury and grain storage raided, they've got enough! But, you know, with 2020 hindsight and several centuries ahead - basically, nearing the end - I can tell you, definitively:

YOU WILL NOT WIN.

You're an optimist, I'll give you that, but like the optimists of my time, your reasoning is faulty. Look around you! Look around me!

It's ridiculous to think something good could come out of these developments. What sort of accelerationism is this? Your love of Sanghyeok's society is... erm... queer admirable, but just like any other large-scale industrial society, it suffers from exactly the same inherent contradictions. It, too, will collapse. Besides, I can point to a thousand socialist states like this one, and all of them suffer the same diseases: the green ecosocialist facade is just that, and socialism is not any more inherently eco-friendly than the previous mass systems.

BUT... seeing this might put you down the path of a Nickie Landie, and I don't want that. Pessimism in the face of catastrophe should not dull your ideals. Egalitarianism and freedom are still goals worthy of fighting for, even if they will never come to fruition. "Left" nationalism, like I've seen growing in my own society, is nothing but a cope, by the way. Same with "right" nationalism; national sovereignty died approximately 3 days after the first of Capital's tentacles reached from the coffers and out into the world.

Er... where was I?

He collapses, the whites of his eyes showing.
