People who make the same 'jokes' over and over in AN threads.

Like here's a free tip from me to the rest of y'all: If you're replying in one of those threads and the user above you has an anime flag (like me) and you're considering just making a low-effort hentai/tentacle rape 'joke' - don't. You ain't being creative nor are you being funny or clever, those 'jokes' stopped being funny back in like 2005 or so.

You mean saying Cory in the House or King of the Hill in the anime thread isn't the peak of quirky up-to-date comedy?

Persagonian Republic, I noticed that one, too. I have no strong opinions on anime, so to me I see the art without the social controversy. (Does it have to do with Internet platforms? Lots of conflicts arise from Internet platforms.)

I suppose it has got to do with otakus and weaboos sully the image of anime and the people who enjoy it. Anime is now commonplace than it used to be but people who form fandoms around their preferred anime is kind of niche.

Or, the reason why Hatsunia became about "techno-progressive Japan" rather than "anime Japan."

Anti-weeaboos always want to point out about how Japan is a xenophobic, overworked hellhole as some sort of "reality check." So what if it wasn't?

I do not know much about Japan, but I am interested in learning more about it--I don't think that's a good enough reason to be anti-anime, though.

From what I can tell, the stigma around anime is that it is either "too immature" or "too perverted."

I may be biased. I'm not white. I don't wanna derail this thread but I think implicit Yellow Peril is still a thing in the West. Xenophobia and hate crimes related to Covid-19 shows this. Japan Bashing and the double standards Americans had to European investors (vs Japanese ones) showed this in the 1980s.

People were afraid of Japan in the 80s, but what do people do now? They make jokes about how fax and stamps are still used. They look down on Japan because it isn't leading in technology anymore.

edit: I've felt like the "yellow peril" attitude is also evidenced by all the "jokes" about how "anime is why two bombs weren't enough."

I've literally never seen anyone stigmatize anime as being 'too immature'.

Now I could go on and on about the opposite actually. The weebies who insist that [insert show here] is totally aimed at teenagers/adults when it literally airs during children's time slots in Japan.

But, that's both getting off-topic and not an exclusive thing to weebies. Lots of people seem to act all defensive when it comes to enjoying shows that just happen to be aimed at children and try to deny the existence of the target demographic.

I'm not sure if some good ol' boy working in an assembly line from a rival American company or a coastal software developer would've cared much about Hatsunia's PR instead of just seeing them as an Other that's competition. Then again, economic interdependence in a globalized world stops bloodshed between big players and opens the path to multiculturalism and multi-national discourse...so there's that.

Maybe I'm a little pessimistic as all the nations I've ever made have some explicit or implied sense of racial tension, but the backdrop is PT history. With both the Palmerans and/or Tohorinese dishing out and receiving settler colonialism and systematic racism. My favorite puppet is basically the Wild West so that's a given. Yay.
