"I've always been curious of Konrad. Rather than being a calm and collected figure he has the looks like a business man of a calm manner but speaks like a mastermind of evil.

I'm sure if I pissed him off enough in person he'd try to fight me, and I wouldn't doubt it if he could hold his own for a bit.

But other than shooting up churches and doing other strange things, I am curious to see what art he's crafted as it seems rather bizarre, even shunned in other nations. I never got into anything artistic but maybe he can spark something in me.

The ominous aura he gives off every time I see him, the manner he speaks in, the action he isn't afraid to take.

It's fearsome, and I do respect it, in a way.

"Luden is a primitive monarch, but that isn't meant to be seen as an insult as that is not my intention nor my character. He is a King in a medieval landscape that requires some level of brutality, compared to cunning to get what you want, and particularly to reach the extent that he is now as the leader of Low Bloods. Now using the tools that he has, and doing the best with them to build his country to be slightly without the need for violence, but still able to wield the sword for its defense, and to expand its territory to enrich his subjects as it is necessary for a young nation to expand as much as possible so that it isn't seen as weak, and bring new opportunities to itself. Overall, I'm positive."

Hmm, I am not looking forward to this if I am to be very honest, but as far as scientific consensus goes - don't conclude before the experiment. In other words, don't knock it until you try it. Admirable military record, considering that he has most very likely run 90% of the time with that kind of outfit. And yet, here I am, spending money and time on a biological armor and fretting about the fact that the back (entry point) is a weak spot. It was more or less covered now, if you are asking and no, I absolutely don't see as to why someone ravishes in such an undressed state all the time. At the very least, I will give the... man, some credit, that he is not the most aggressive there is, wanting to try other options with military intervention being the last resort. Overall, not very delighted, not especially when I have to share my name with him. I can do better at evaluating, but really, get me out.

I cannot entirely agree with his sentiments, as he has few close-friends as a result, but his dedication to keeping peace is something I can agree with. It is also always a comfort to find a fellow politician who was in service to their nation, and can understand what it means to sacrifice for the greater good. I can also admire his brilliant mind for inventing a new material to protect those under his command, though it is a shame that it was too heavy for standard usage on the battlefield. Marcus is a competent, compassionate, and thoughtful leader, though I imagine his lack of close friends and allies as well as his 'on the fence' neutrality may come as a detriment later on down the road."-Markus Auron-Sirus

"Inogo is a good friend of mine, to say the least. First off, he is a young leader, just like me. He is a visionary, perhaps much more than I am, and I respect him for that. While I am myself bogged down by a century, perhaps more, of bureaucracy, Inogo dared to rebel against it, and - forgive my arrogance - came to be a successful great leader like myself. Looking at his policies, I find myself mostly in agreement with his views. For instance, the Great Rail Leap Forward, that being the policy I agree the most with. It comes in two facets - one in regards to infrastructure, and one in regards with the welfare streamlining.

In regards to the infrastructure rebuilding, I applaud that Inogo saw the importance of reliable infrastructure. The infrastructure experienced widespread destruction, as far as I've heard, and as one would imagine happen after a revolution. While some leader would just leave them be, or even leaving them to decay (totally not throwing shade at my predecessors), he had the foresight to not only rebuild them, but to also improve them with high speed railway. In my opinion, this is sure to help the nation rejuvenate itself after ridding itself of its old government. Of course, I don't exactly agree with the revolution, but I'm commenting on the policy, not its cause.

In regards to the welfare streamlining, I do applaud the attempt to cut costs while maintaining welfare to the people. This sufficiently shows that he, being a visionary of a better Sherechia, still is a realist, at least in regards to the cutting of costs. Many times have I seen people falling into either of two pitfalls - throwing money into welfare without regards of its practicality, like Maduro, or recklessly cutting welfare to cut costs, like my predecessor. Inogo fell into neither, and I believe it is commendable.

The only criticism I have against him is perhaps his short-temperedness. While I appreciate that outbursts are rare, thankfully, I do advise him to... chill the [expletive] out when he does lose the patience with the government when they're being inefficient. It's hard, yes, but nobody said being a statesman is easy."

The Supreme Leader, Zevqir

So who do we have here. Another alien?! Why do I always get the same alien species?! Anyways who do we have here. Matthew Young Smith? A president of some random country on Earth. You are also the chairperson of the Social Democratic League, no idea what that means, but I don't care about your stupid alien shenanigans. So in your youth you formed some sort of group that makes music? You aliens are smart enough to make music?! I don't think that I can really believe you. Why is your label even called Motorway 17? What does it have to do with terrestrial roadways. At age 18 you enlisted in the military because of conscription or something. I've also been conscripted into the army once and had to fight against alien scum like you. So during your time you were deployed in Iraq. You even were in a situation where you had to fight like 20 jiha...somethings with 5 people and came out with no casualties. Why does a lowly alien like you get a deployment with no casualties, but mine had a very high death rate. Is it because the opponents you were fighting were even more worthless then you are?! So after your deployment you got into politics and got elected president. So now I can see your policies. None of this stuff will help bring back Ultra-Galactica, so why should I care. The only thing that you can do to help bringing it back is by letting me smash your head in with a sacrificial hammer. So after reading your bio, the only thing that I've learned is that you are another sacrificable alien that's only good for bringing back Ultra-Galactica.

"Well, what can I say. Certainly, Herr Gilbert here espouses the ideal characteristics of a "national leader", much more the figurehead. Yes, truthfully, I do think that direct field combat experience is useless as a skill in terms of managing a nation if compared to, say, economic or geopolitical understanding, corporate leadership, or even running the logistics side of a military operation. But given that the necessary qualities of a leader, who needs to be just and respected, is different to the qualities of a subordinate, which can be more flexible with the goal of getting things done, let's just hope that he has the men he needed."

"I'll be lying if most of the things he espouses aren't just a bunch of empty buzzwords, though. The heck's 'Prussian traditions', anyways? Is it cool uniforms? The cutest anime girls I found often adopt imperial German military aesthetics, and I do think that the money is worth it for the public to fund such kinds of cultural LARPing if they want to. Or maybe, the president is talking about common virtues like discipline and honesty. But really, Prussia is historically not a state with an army, but an army with a state. That, in contrast, is idiotic. There isn't really any reason to give preference to a singular institution in favor of the rest for no reason except historical LARPing, especially if other institutions are gaining more and more importance as our technological society advances. Even with all his talk about 'keeping an open mind', if the root is retarded, then the results will never be as effective as they could've been. The world needs breakthrough inventors and

Now, which person do we have next on the list of people that I'm supposed to give my opinion on. Alexandra of the United Kingdom?! Oh no, why is her ugly alien face on the background, I don't need to see it. It reminds me of how your species was one of the many aliens responsible for the fall of Ultra-Galactica.

So if I'm reading this right, you have a long name. Why?! Are your parents so inconfident that they need to give you multiple names. This reeks of the typical behavior I would expect of an alien like you. So in your childhood, you were interested in science in sports. I don't really believe that because only the glorious descendants of Ultra-Galactica can be smart and strong. Then you became the princess of Wales, and you visited another place on your planet called "United Arab Enirates" where you saw all of those landmarks. Landmarks that I presume were build by slaves because I don't think your species are hardworking enough to build that. Then your grandmother died and you got very very sad. So you got send to some rehabilitation facility because you almost overdosed on drugs. But after that, you went on vacation to the Maldives where you got drunk. Typical for an alien to not have control over their impulses. So then you studied again and eventually got crowned queen where you visited a bunch of places, including the United Nations. Was this before or after they became humanity's defacto world-government? You then did a lot of things that I don't really have the context for to comment on. There was some kind of virus? And also a bunch of protests? Then you banned some random former president from entering your country? I think that this part of your bio is a good place to say that you are already banned from entering the Scalmar Followers, unless you are part of a sacrifice so that we can bring back glorious Ultra-Galactica. Just like the rest of all the alien scum, you are nothing more than another potential sacrifice to our beloved dead gods.

"So, Zevqir, the ovoid comptroller of the milky way. I have to admit, I'm not really familiar with this sort of...organism? Regardless, it's obvious his early head injury was responsible for more than just a hefty shiner. If you ask me, it only made him more agitated and quick to anger, which is worrisome. Is it his fault? No, probably not, but given his extensive record of brutality I think this creature should take a personal day or two to meditate and realign his chi, in fact, I don't think I've ever met anyone more in need of yoga than this caped despot. Also, I don't like to throw the word 'institutionalization' around lightly, but I mean, crushing a man's head with a hammer? In what galaxy is that not considered deeply alarming?"

"It's hard to expect much more from an individual who has been religiously indoctrinated from such a young age, but even this ideology, with its strange, out of this world surrealism, doesn't deserve someone this incoherent and hard to predict. I know he thinks his extremism is helping to further the cause, but it's only setting them back; like, a lot. Leadership requires restraint, and Zevqir? Well he's the exact opposite of restraint. I won't pretend to understand the hardships of an alien gang of space-pirates, but I fear this cult-leader will be the death of their movement. Now I believe in meritocracy as much as the next hardworking American, but when a go-getter like Zevqir performs well, sometimes forcing them up the ladder beyond their means only serves to kill their future. He should've remained amongst the rank and file; he would've been better off."

"Shawn Bjornson, what a rich, metallic name! I'll admit, his rise to power has to be one of the most unorthodox I've ever heard of. Performing a series of increasingly challenging puzzles and games while intoxicated? Well, not exactly the way I'd go about hiring my staff, but given the brusque, nomadic regimentation of the Sky Reavers, it's kind of a brilliant assessment. And if Shawn can finish an entire, honest-to-god obstacle course while high and drunk, maybe he is the best person to protect his people. There's no doubt he's always willing to fight, that's for sure. And speaking of which, call his revolutionary ideals what you will, but this man almost single handedly took on the cartels, crony-dictatorships, and corruption rings without a qualm of regret, and that takes stones. He's like a six foot five, 250 pound Robinhood!"

"Shawn, well, he might be a little out there, but he gets the job done quickly, effectively, and without waste. And for a self proclaimed 'non-economist', he has some damn sensible financial common sense, even if his paperwork is lacking from time to time. No leader can expect to be an archipelago, and Shawn understands that; he delegates effectively, and knows when a project is beyond him, which is always more impressive than virtuosic over-confidence. He's an intuitively natural leader, and as much as I hope he leads a long, prosperous term as overboss, who are we kidding? This guy will be dead by the time he's forty, and he couldn't be happier about that prospect..."

In insisting it's a political simulation, NS ignores its reality as a political simulation game. Games have boundaries, and modern roleplaying games have safety tools. NS has neither, leaving it stuck as a badge-collecting pay-to-win where causticness is excused as "character," grieving/raiding is "just politics," and F7 is more courteous than General Assembly.

"It is ironic that after all these years of the world calling me a tyrant- calling my regime dystopian, dehumanizing, and evil- and yet, the universe, in its entropic ways, has spawned this. Liagolas. It is difficult to discern where to even begin. I am asked to speak of the state's leader, and yet I am met with the dilemma of distinguishing if there, in fact, even is one. The young woman known as the Liagolas (as opposed to the state of the same name) appears to be little more than a puppet that exists solely to give its ruling council a voice. There is little to nothing that she can do to meaningfully rule her nation- if you can call it a nation, that is. The concept of Liagolas is... unconventional, to say the least, even by our standards. It exists both as the aforementioned figurehead and as an all-encompassing authority that invades and dominates all aspects of its peoples' lives. Though my authority as Chancellor is wielded with a heavy hand, it has been for the betterment of the Tarkish people. To bring the Tarkish nation to new heights and one day allow its citizens to experience the greatest human existence possible. The hive mentality of Liagolas is aimless. It exists solely to exist. I can only hope this wave of unrest that has been reported leads to a revolution. It will be one the Vanguard's would be eager to advise and assist. Perhaps this will be the first step in a wave of change- of evolution- that cannot be stopped."

At a press conference at Casa Libertad, the president of the nation Grace Austin gave her opinion about the leader of the nation Tarkvald.

In my opinion, I do not support the idea of creating an autocracy, I am indifferent to knowing that there is no political freedom which is something that everyone should have, it is well deserved to take into account that to come to power is very pleasant to do so for the democracy that is the pillar of our society, as a consequence of the capitalist authoritarianism that I have always fought to end since my time as I am a revolutionary socialist, even though we share the ideals of socialism and communism, I will never try to promote authoritarianism or worse, fascism or the National Socialist. Your economic system seems to me to be something unique in its kind, we would love to study it further to learn more about the world around us, is what I can say about the honorable Chancellor Sebastian Savel, on the part of his servant and revolutionary compatriot.

OOC: I suggest you either give a link or make it clear which one is your leader factbook, it took me a good 10 minutes to find any sort of information... in which case this is the only thing I found

"The Power of the Proletariat"

Dr. Grace Summer Austin Atkins from Hawkins

She is current Minister of Welfare and Social Peace of the Democratic Congress of Parliament since 2015, elected and elected by the unions and non-governmental or social organizations to take a protest in Parliament; creator of the workers' union during the Revolution of the Altars (1988) and of the participation of the nation's proletariat as activist and policy of the nation in favor of workers and social welfare in the face of the oppressive activities of the liberal capitalist system

Political, economic and social ideology: Socialist with a human face, Corporate Socialist and Council Communist.

Atkhal Daishim: I find Dr Austin to have a very agreeable view. Nothing too crazy, no genocides and cultural revolutions, just a sensible leftist that cares for the people and can stop to check the situation, unlike some other leftists who insist on disastrous unplanned and brainless mass action. I quite like you based on your views alone but I can't judge you as a person since there is no information, or there is but I'm not sure where it is...

"Limited information, unfortunate. Nevertheless, Atkhal surprises me a former con, made revolutionary, and later Supreme Chancellor. His demeanor strikes me as one suited to be a civil engineer but to be trusted with a weapon? Hard to tell, even when thrown into a civil war. He might end up as self-caused causality and not one made by the enemy. However, that is just my impression, and it is clear that luckily wasn't the case. Although, it would have been appreciated if there was intel on his early life, his role in the war, and what he does afterwards. His personality is of little interest to me, as his interest to become a civil engineer is more intriguing, and how they interest adapted to the new situation he now lives in. Overall, my stance is now neutral until more info is provided."
