"While it is certainly impressive that the Aterian Empire managed to rise so quickly under Nemo's leadership, she remains little more than the typical psychotic despot- and psychotic she is; I suspect I do not need to say what we do with the insane in Tarkvald. I also suspect all that she has achieved has been naught but for her own personal satisfaction, given her general personality and lack of rationality, and especially so considering the fact that she has no apparent plan for the inevitability of her own demise- leaving this 'empire' of hers to collapse overnight as her cowardly generals finally grow enough of a spine to take action in her absence. Regardless, none of her achievements would have come to pass if she weren't born into Ateria's backward monarchy. Though I cannot boast the conquest of Caoiva, I am a self-made man. That is one title Nemo can never pin onto the end of her name."

His recognition of the fragment and collective weakening caused by libertarianism is commendable, such foresight is certainly a good quality for a leader to have. That said, a lot of his claimed positions appear to be self-congratulatory with little meaning in my eyes.

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER

Regarding Emperor of Khoronzon, Narcissus VII

I think the problem with Narcissus Lazar is that for his entire life he has known nothing but martial combat and war. His fanaticism is diluted with a superiority complex that undermines any intelligent reasoning for his eternal destruction, not only to himself, but to his state.

As much as he believes he is in control of his destiny, via control of his armies, it's actually the opposite. The Ministry of War is in control of him. It moulds his personality, it tells him what to think, do and feel. It fractures his critical thinking into a single cog, turning for the direction of war. The military is his only personality left. That's why he wants eternal war. Not for the glory and honour of his nation, folk, or even himself.

If someone were to destroy Khoronzon, killing Narcissus would do little. The entire nation is built around the military-industrial complex, including its leader, posted to serve it. But that's not my fight.

The way in which he attained power intrigues me as well - a sort of... necrocratic, magic-enabled oligarchy, though still adhering to monarchic principles. I would like to examine this "heart" some day. As it stands, I don't really have any issues with him, save perhaps his support for interventionism. The belief in one's right to interfere in the runnings of other nations is a dangerous one... let us hope, then, that the king-incumbent of Thakia isn't foolish enough to exert it overmuch. Regardless, I am in no way opposed to trade with his nation - those who operate by such novel principles of heredity and governance must surely have something worth attaining."

Regarding His Imperial Majesty, Emperor Edmund V of Gylthas.

Nearing his deathbed, I do believe Emperor Edmund will go down in history as the Emperor who ushered in for Gylthus an era of security, mediocrity, and content. His reign, uncharacterized by the gallantry of combat or the glory of reform, will quickly fade from history as just another man who sat upon the throne. Hopefully his countrymen never underappreciate the value of stability that he brings.

How come we refer to a flock of geese as a flock of geese but not call a herd of moose a herd of meese?

"The emotions beset by the First King are admirable, for being capable to feel anything after existential crisis is a reality that I wish I encountered myself. And though I very much respect John Mercer's profitable and impeccable business etiquettes, I find therein lies prosperity in the first King's ruling should he refrain from constant war.

Therefore it is much to my pleasure that I see the first king as a person-of-interest for their emotion and dedication, I only wish they proceed a more civilized economic growth soon so that Alerian-Lowian trading may sprout."

protector for several Neumart freighters across the Channels”

"Prince Albany is a textbook capitalist. Though it is a departure from the textbook monarch, he is a monarch nonetheless, and I expect future generations of Alerian leadership to become out-of-touch, entitled brats that will destroy their country on a whim for some emotional reason and respond to their people's suffering with 'let them eat cake'. Alenshire boasts economic prosperity, but as is always the case with such highly capitalistic societies, it is prosperity only for the rich, and nothing but continued toil and misery for the poor, who have to send their children to work in hazardous conditions just to make ends meet. If Alenshire does not reform peacefully, it will be beset by revolution, and I do not believe that those who take power after that will be as enlightened as us in Tarkvald."

"From what is written, I find the supposed "first king" to be a careless military leader, especially his motivation to wage war with that unscrupulous city that resides under the sea of all places. He should take into consideration his hastiness, declaring war so soon when there is plenty of time to amass an effective military force for offensive operations; perhaps he should take plenty of advice from more experienced members in his country. He's foolish really, it agitates me to be frank."

"What's the word I'm looking for? Ignorant, that's right.

You know not of the situation that resides between Lowblood and Rapture.

Rapture seeks to enslave and take what they want from my nation, re-educate the population to become more weak and easy to influence.

Sure I can turn my populus into beast to rebel and fool all Raptues advances for the most. Sure it's not something a leader with morals would do, but in the end I'd rather leave my nation uninhabitable rather than let someone take from us in such an ill mannered way.

Because after all, the king before me died, because Rapture waged war and within a short span of time killed of the king who wasn't even aware of this until there was a bullet in his head.

Don't declare me a fool unless you know the whole story, it makes you seem just as foolish.

I've been around since the start of Lowblood to suggest I ask someone else in my nation how to properly wage a war. I thought I heard it all. My methods are harsh, but I'm not dumb."-The first king
