HIM Henry, North German Emperor, was the third child and second son of Crown Prince Frederick (later Kaiser Friedrich) and Victoria, Princess Royal of the United Kingdom (later Empress Victoria), eldest daughter of the British Queen Victoria. Henry was three years younger than his brother, long-time Crown Prince William (born 27 January 1859). He became the crown prince after the abdication of his elder brother from the office.

Apparently, Peru Annexed Ecuador (Or maybe the other way around) and Menelik II's conquests were even more successful, expanding the Ethiopian Empire into modern-day Kenya.

If I'm correct in my understanding, the Elam industry is primarily agriculture and oil, which they seem to have a lot of. The first time I read it, I thought that its agriculture could have been largely supporting its petrochemical industry through the production of biofuel, but I think that their sugarcane fields are mainly used to make sugar. That's a shame, I found the idea of biofuel being a major economic export to be an intriguing idea.

Despite their gigantic oil reserves, though, they have also invested in renewable energy in the form of their hydroelectric dams. Good show!

"The origins of the Dushan are shrouded in legend and mystery. No central authority existed among the myriad of warring kingdoms and city states. Technological development and interaction with other worlds was severely limited. Many of the dushani traditions, ethics and honor codes have their roots in those archaic era.

History would change forever as the lands fell under the reign of terror of The Great Tyrant. Legend says that a thousand Warriors from all tribes were summoned to his Court where they swore and oath of fealty to him and in return he blessed and cursed them alike with the gift of power, which from there was passed onwards to their descendants. Thus, so the ancient texts says, the first Dushan came into existence."

Their southern half (South Germany) is also a constitutional monarchy which is headed by Kaiser Franz Joseph I, who has a considerable amount of executive power, but prefers to act as a ceremonial figure head. Their sphere of influence is as follows:

The Kingdom of Hungary (Lesser Power)
The Kingdom of Bohemia
The Grand Duchy of Galicia-Lodomeria
The Grand Duchy of Illyria

They also have a small colonial presence in Libya which has been the topic of much hostility and bitter rivalry between South Germany, Italy and the Ottoman Empire.
