Ilitu's influence as a Goddess began to wane in the 17th Century and some time later, democratic institutions mitigated how much people in the surface kowtowed to her. I'll interpret this as literally being a power-struggle and figuratively as the decline of theocentric in the aftermath of Enlightenment ideologies.

Hitler pretty much faced the same problem Napoleon did. He managed to take Moscow in a mad dash, ignoring the harsh Russian Winter, but Russians -who don't follow Western rules of war- did not surrender upon the fall of Moscow. This meant that the Allies had an opening to march through in the West, leading to the collapse of the Reich and the establishment of a conservative military Junta -still authoritarian, but not as batshit crazy- in Germany during the latter years of the second World War. While Germany still surrendered unconditionally, the USSR could not advance as far west as it did OTL, there were fewer casualties to the Holocaust, and almost all of Germany wasn't utterly wasted as it was OTL.

Their military appears to utilize a weird mishmash of tech and pseudo-tech, alongside superweapons ripped from almost diametrically opposed canons. I can't help but think that the latter part wasn't very well thought-out, since they don't seem to have the coherent tech-basis to support any of it.

Despite his appearance, their leader is surprisingly calm and also detached at times. And for some reason, he can vary his height as he pleases.

Somehow, the Tohorinese people consider a fictional invasion from popular literature to have ended in "decisive Tohorinese victory" by repelling the enemy "Yamato Empire" despite suffering 9 times as many casualties. Apparently their enemies used some sort of large robot machine too?

On September 22, 1992, the FREERANGE project was started by a certain "Confederacy" to investigate the disappearance/loss of control of several space battlefleets and the subsequent formation of an automated "Combined Battlegroup PALISADE." Project FREERANGE's goal is to understand the CBG and to neutralize it.

Seeing a thicc PRC-led Chinese hegemony in a sea of balkanised and/or liberalised Chinas pleases my inner Xiaboo. Sure it's one of the "bad guys" in this universe, but that just makes it cool. That aside, I've learned that in a series of skirmishes between NATO and the Warsaw Pact, known as the "Shitstick Wars", both the USA and the USSR were pushed into reluctant conflict by a warmongering European Commission, which sought total war against the Warsaw Pact due to a perceived border threat that it posed.

In recent weeks, protests have broken out in the regions of San Oa and Navaryn, 2 very Republican regions, because of the recent referendum held in central St.Parlor. In other news, the Garndu Rebels have been pushed back into southern Hasasu, as more soldiers are recruited from the surrounding regions. Also, the shooters of the recent Kanarana shooting have all been arrested and sent to jail, and the 3 who are injured are expected to make full recoveries.

There is an ongoing rebellion on one of their island.
