Remember when NSTracker was a thing?

I miss it, but the creator has no interest in continuing it since apparently no one cared about it to ask them what was going on with it being down for so long. (Probably because almost no one knew who created it).

Sucks cause it was probably the best NS 'calculator' site considering how it worked.

What was that?

It was one of those calculator sites that would do shit like calculate your military size, exchange rate between your currency and NSD/USD, your import/export rate, etc.

Except unlike nearly every other one of those sites, which just bases its data entirely off of the stats that NS uses, NSTracker was customizable. You'd make an account (using the name of the nation you wanna use) and you could basically customize everything. Could put in your actual IC population, adjust all of your government spending as you'd like it, how much money you make via exports and how much you spend on imports, the percentage of your population that was in the military, how the military budget was divided based on branches, etc.

Basically, you could just fine tune everything as you'd like it and could even do stuff like enter in your national leader, year your nation is set in, your total area (and it would calculate population density), etc. for stuff not directly related to your stats. Even had the ability to add your legislature and even 'factbooks', if you wanted to.

Was fucking great.

I did once create an Appalachian nation that combined corrupted indigenous placenames with a robust Southern culture and agrarian economy. I never really developed the idea, but it could have been an interesting departure from the usual low-effort approaches to a Not!Southern nation since I intended to put a good deal more effort into it.

On this note, modern nations that continue to engage in slavery to support agricultural enterprises despite seasonal immigrant labor and automation being much cheaper and more cost-effective on the whole. Usually, when I see storefronts doing this, I simply interpret it as RPer's coding their nations as villainous or edgy.

It works really well with certain colors in my experience. It does make me want to exchange the black for dark grey though.

New nation idea, strong Turkey that has friendly relations with Greece to trigger the Byzantineboos.

How about a Greece-Turkey dual monarchy for a real powermove against the Byzantineboos.

The real powermove is an Ionian Union that unites both Turks and Greeks into a USSR-like state with both Turkish and Greek SSRs. It will annoy Byzantiboos who tend to be right wing and also annoy Turkaboos who are Turkish chauvinists since Greeks will be friendly with the Turks.

Only if it also features Albania and Armenia. Make it also a progressive utopia, with minority and LGBT rights enshrined in the constitution.

It has to include the entirety of Kurdistan as well. Maybe toss in Azerbaijan for good measure.

Make Kurdistan the capital republic, and have all Kurdish territories occupied by Turkey given to Kurdistan. Keep Azerbaijan out though, iirc they're Turkish allies and wouldn't serve much to make this a more irritating arrangement.

Give Azerbaijan to Iran for a Turkstroke, and then make Iran allied to the union so they can't do anything about it.
