To be fair, in the case of Aureunterra, it is arguably an empire because it is a group of nations under one singular regional authority (Rome, Macedon, Russia, etc), the traditional definition of one.

I was more referring to "Basically the United States (Federation) but with a monarchy instead of a president"

To be fair one can argue the point that the US is an empire as long as PR, the US Virgin Islands, AS, and its other island holdings exist, but it's debatable how well it fits the qualification, especially now that its significant overseas holdings have been granted independence.

There's some overlap, though. I mean, to use an example of yours (and correct me if I'm wrong) iirc Lenin was carrying out purges of his political opponents within the socialist blocs even prior to the October Revolution, and there's definitely an argument to be made that power corrupts in almost every case.

Well, yes, but I am pretty sure Miku was referring to "Good" Autocrats rather than "arguably good".

While I understand that you probably have me on ignore and probably won't see this, no. I'd just like to add that furthermore a characteristic is not a cliché; "liberal democracy" is not a cliché, for instance, it's a classification. But the narrative tropes that go along with that classification in most cases are indeed clichés.

Dictators that are a self-insert of the user's own political views are most definitely cliché though, but dictatorships done right are not, because if they're done right then they're distinct and unique enough to be worth reading up on.

Also, did you appeal the warn? I find being warned over a meme to be absolutely ridiculous but I'm not going to speak any further because I don't want to be jannied.

Yeah, that's true. People using this site to act out their chosen political views via a dictatorial self-insert who doesn't have anyone to tell them no are all too common, unfortunately.

It was very much expected though, my first nations were like that and I'm sure many other people also started off as powerwanks for their own beliefs. Not the worst cliché so long as those people eventually start making semi-interesting content.

Yes

Oh my GOODness, that is a cliché. It's funny, people make these wacky and increasingly zany and out their ideologies - but in their attempt to be totally unique and silly, they became generic and boring, sometimes even painful.

Here's a cliché that's likely never been brought up:

NS users who come up with 'conlangs' for their nation but it's literally just them typing random gibberish that vaguely looks like it could be words with no care for literally anything that makes a language a language like: spelling/pronunciation rules, usage of IPA to help in pronunciation, fucking grammar, etymology, etc.

My nation's "conlang" is actually technically two conlangs, although IC they're both considered very different dialects of the same language, the rigid social hierarchy in Aureumterra and the historical connections of the aristocracy- you know I'm just going to copy the linguistics essay I wrote on discord

The Aureunterrese language spoken by the Emperor and the aristocracy is very distinct from that of the "lowboms" and the "commonfolk." Things are further complicated by the Finns, who while having been largely assimilated into Aureunterrese society still retain a distinct Finnish dialect when speaking Aureunterrese, and Finnish itself may be spoken in some isolated areas. Icelandic continues to be spoken in Iceland despite the consistent attempts at civilizing these "barbaric peoples"

The aristocracy and ruling class speaks with more "elaborate" words, such as "Fjellöstadur" instead of "Fjell" for "Mountain," the upper class "sub-language" also uses the eth (ð) far less, so lower classes would say "Straðokkur" while the aristocracy would say "Stradökkur." Certain words from the aristocratic "language" are almost unintelligible to commonfolk, for example the word for "Car" is spoken by aristocrats as "Göthenkard" while commonfolk would say "Auðavot." Basically for most of history the Aureuntherrese aristocracy were weeb for Germany. Which is why the aristocratic dialects are so Germanized while the commonfolk dialect is much closer to Old Norse. For example, "Jag har bestänt mig för att landet" is the aristocratic dialect, while commonfolk would say "Ég hef ákveðið að yfirgefa landið" though they both mean the same thing

TL;DR Aristocratic dialect is based on weird amalgamation of Swedish and Danish, while common folk dialect is based on Icelandic and Faroese

Three F7 clichés:

1. What does AN mean??? Does anyone know??
2. (Kind of relating to the above one) People who post in a thread where you guess something about the AN (like how they deal with traitors, languages they speak, their religion, etc.) and instead post the answer for their nation because they don't understand how the thread works.
3. People who will quote and reply to a post from like 50+ pages ago in a thread. Extra bonus points if they quote and reply to the fucking OP or something.

Typos make one cry. Especially when one is the committer of said typo. But it's worse when it isn't just a typo.
