Ironical that this statement was made by the same person who broke the PG-13 rules with adult book titles...

Well to be fair they really are bad. Most border on pornography and they ruin the immersion.

Bonus points if they're a 30 year old general despite most people reaching that level are pushing 50 in real life.

I was going to make my leader like that at first, but then I decided nah, doesn't seem right, so I have him a lower rank for his military service.

Okay, now onto my cliché for the day: Leader pictures made in piccrew or taken out of some flash visual novel. I've seen this trope in use heavily and while some people do well on it (E.G: Khoronzon or whatever with Emperor Narcissus) because after they do the picture they embellish it further via photo editing, others just leave the picture as is without even taking out the background or even the link to the flash game website. I always go somewhere along the lines of: Bro what in the bloody hell of cringe is this.

I'm somewhat guilty of this trope as well, with my either The Sims or FIFA generated characters. But at least I go through the trouble of making it up with consistent writing, characterization, and editing the damn pictures to take the background out if where they stand don't make sense.

If only Sims 4 has The Giants Pack as a DLC... My alternative method is simply to use green-screen / chroma-key to crop it out.

This reminds me of some of the alien species that I made in Spore. I'm planning to to something to make it less obvious, I just don't really know how. I also made some spaceships in Spore, but I used paint.net to give them a different background.
